PROLOGO. PREFACE.

SO N tantos los Dictionarios de todos generos, y tan varios los particulares Prologos dellos, que sera casi imposible dezir algo en este, que no se aya dicho antes en algun otro; por lo qual, aquellos mal acondicionados, que dessean ser tenidos por Criticos, à costa del credito de los que procuran en alguna manera ser de algun util en esta vida, comunicando lo que saben à los demas que aun no han alcançado el mismo saber no dexaran de diffamar al escritor con el titulo de Plagiario. Por esta, y otras no menos sustanciales razones, se excusara toda prolixidad. Lo primero de que le parece al autor desta obra advertir al lector es, que no se balla con bastante caudal de vanidad, para enganar al mundo, alegando, que las ordenes precisas de personas calificadas, y la importunidad de amigos, le han obligado à emprender este trabajo, estos motivos no han

D ICTIONARIES of all sorts are so numerous, and the respective Prefaces to them so various, that it will be next to an impossibility to say any thing in this, that has not been before said in some other, for which those ill-natur'd persons, who would be thought Criticks, at the expence of the reputation of such as endeavour to be some way serviceable in their generation, by imparting what they know to the rest that have not yet attain'd the same knowledge, will be ready to revile the Writer with the title of a Plagiary. For this, and other no less substantial reasons, all prolixity shall be here avoided. The first thing the compiler of this Work thinks fit to acquaint the Reader with is, that he has not the vanity to impose upon the publick, by telling them, the commands of great men, and the importunity of friends have

*han llegado à inducirle : Ningun gran persuajage conoce, cuya generosidad alcance à soportar semejante empleo, ni buziera sido facil persuadirle amigos preten-didos, que se tomassen la libertad de aconsejarle que se impusiesse tan trabajosa tarea, sin mostrarle el fruto que avia de sacar della. Solos los libreros han pre-valecido, los quales echando de ver que no se hallava un Dicionario Español, concluyeron que el sacar uno à luz les seria provechoso, y por algunas razones le juzgaron capaz de cumplir lo que desseavan, y conformemente se lo propusieron en terminos que le parecieron razonables.
Esto es hablar claro ; los demas son solo pretextos vanos, dictados por la presun-cion, pues no obstante todas las falsedades que publican para encubrir su avaricia ;
los mas realçados personages no aspiran à mas que su interes, y los mas aplaudidos defensores de sus patrias las bu-xieran dexado perecer, sino se engrande-cieran à si por los mismos medios con que procuran engaytar el mundo, como si fueran effetos de un zelo puro por el bien de sus dichas patrias.*

En lo que toca à este Dicionario, ni se puede esperar que el autor hable con desprecio de su obra, lo qual fuera contrario à nuestro natural, pues todos en general tienen algun amor à lo que han roducido ; ni le està bien alabarla, ual no dexara de parecer muy grande zancia, contra todas reglas de mo-destia,

oblig'd him to undertake this work, those motives have been remote from him, he is a stranger to any mighty persons who have so much generosity as to encourage such an undertaking, and would not easily comply with such pretended friends as should take the liberty to put him upon such a laborious task, without showing him what account it would turn to.
The only inducement he has had, has been from the Booksellers, who finding a demand for a Spanish Dictionary, concluded it would be for their advantage to print one, and for several reasons judg'd him capable of answering their expectation, and accordingly propos'd to him such terms as he thought fit to accept of.
This is plain dealing, all other pretences are but empty notions inspir'd by vainglory, when whatsoever falsehood they give out to palliate their avarice, all that the greatest men really aim at is nothing but their interest, and the most celebrated patriots would suffer their country to perish, did they not raise themselves by that which they would have thought a zeal to support it.

As to this Dictionary, neither can the Author be expected to speak meanly of his performance, which would be unnatural, all men being apt to have some esteem for their own productions, nor may he presume to extol it, because that would justly be look'd upon as a notable piece of arrogancy, against all the rules

destia, y por consiguiente antes fuera quitar que añadir à su estimacion. Esto se puede afirmar con verdad, y sin incurrir censura, à saber, que es el mas copioso de quantos hasta aora han salido à luz, por quanto todos los que estavan antes impressos en varias lenguas, y se pudieron aver por dinero, han sido repassados, para las adiciones, como se puede echar de ver en este, por estar los autores citados, quando algunas palabras parecen dudosas. Ademàs, el autor estos años passados ha leydo muchos libros Españoles, que no avia visto antes, sin omitir cosa que se hallasse en ellos propria para sus adiciones, nombrando los escritores, quandoquiera que las palabras de que se sirven se apartan mucho del estilo de los mas modernos, ò del que al presente se usa en conversacion. Acerca de lo qual se ha de reparar, que en la lengua Española se han admitido mas novedades, desde el tiempo que se instituyeron academias en aquella nacion, y que ha sido tan grande y tan familiar el comercio con Francia, por razon de aver admitido un Rey Frances, que en dozientos años antes de aquellos dias, de manera que al presente se halla una multitud de palabras nuevamente forjadas, de que no avia noticia alguna antes deste siglo en que estamos. Escusado sera aqui enseñar à los que aprenden, el sonido y pronunciacion de todas las letras del alphabeto, por quanto las hallaran perfectamente explicadas en sus particulares y proof modesty, and consequently rather lessen than add to its esteem. This may be asserted with truth, and without incurring any censure, viz. that it is the most copious of any yet extant, in regard that all those which were publish'd before in several languages, and could be purchas'd, have been consulted, to make the improvements, as may appear upon perusal, their several authors being quoted, where any words are liable to be call'd in question. Besides, the compiler has read many Spanish authors of late, which he had not seen before, and omitted nothing he could find in them, that was proper to be added, mentioning them particularly where the terms they use seem to deviate very much from the stile of the more modern authors, or what occurs in common conversation. Wherein it is to be observ'd, that the Spanish language has receiv'd greater alteration since the erecting of academies in that nation, and the great and familiar intercourse with France, upon their admitting of a French king, than it did in two hundred years before that time, so that there is now a multitude of new fram'd Spanish words; which were utterly unknown before this present century. It will be needless to instruct learners here in the Spanish way of founding and pronouncing the several letters of the alphabet, because they will find the same in their proper and respective places, fully explain'd, after the most

y propios lugares, en el modo mas intelligible, porque algunas dellas son muy diferentes de lo que se usa en Ingles, pero en lo general concuerdan con el Latin, del qual el Español trae su origen, y la semejança que le tiene es tan grande, que el que tuviere algun razonable conocimiento del primero podra con brevedad aprender el segundo. La mayor diferencia consiste en algunas palabras que introduxeron los Godos y los Alarabes mientras fueron señores de España, los quales tambien hizieron alguna mudança en la pronunciacion: à lo qual se puede añadir lo que se tocò arriba, acerca de las palabras que se han introducido de nuevo desde la grande correspondencia con Francia, y algunas pocas tomadas de la lengua Italiana. Las mas destas ultimas se hallan principalmente entre la gente culta, Narcissos y Damas remilgadas, que aman hablar un language, que muchas vezes ni ellos, ni los que los oyen entienden, como lo vemos demasiadamente practicado en Inglaterra, adonde no son menos apetecidas las palabras noveles, aunque aya otras viejas proprias de mayor significacion; y à la verdad, no es menos enfadoso que ridiculo el oyr hombres ignorantes, y mugeres tontas que se cansan por dar à conocer su poco seso en una gerigonça, que no ay quien la entienda.

Los verbos irregulares van todos conjugados, hasta donde llegan sus irregularidades, most intelligible manner, several of them differing very much from what is usual in English, but most generally agreeing with the Latin, from which the Spanish derives its original, and so much resembles it, that any one who is knowing in the former may soon make himself master of the latter. The greatest difference consists in some few words introduc'd by the Goths and the Arabs, whilst they rul'd in Spain, who also vary'd the pronunciation; to which may be added, what was hinted before, of the new coin'd words since the extraordinary intercourse with France, and some few borrow'd from the Italian. Most of these last are chiefly in use among the affected part of the nation, Beaus and Bels, who are fond of delivering themselves in such a language, as very often neither they nor their hearers understand, as we see too often practis'd in England, where we are no less fond of new coin'd words, tho' we have old ones more significant of our own; and it is no less provoking than ridiculous to hear ignorant men and silly women labouring to expose their nonsense in an unintelligible jargon.

The irregular verbs are all conjugated, as far as their irregularities extend, which variedades, lo qual sera de mucho util à los que han menester servirse dellos; otras cosas que se encaminan por reglas ciertas, se han de aprender, ô por la grammatica, ô la costumbre, como no pertenecientes à esta obra. Son tantos los refranes y las frases Españolas, que los curiosos apenas ballaran alguna sentencia, ô en libros, ô en conversacion, que no esté aqui bastantemente explicada. El lenguaje deste Dicionario es el mismo que se habla en la corte de España, y entre toda la gente acendrada de aquella nacion, y por consiguiente el mismo que se halla en todos sus escritores mas afamados; y adonde ocurrieren otras palabras, siempre llevan su nota de que son antiguas, ô particulares de algunas provincias; y se ha de reparar que la misma lengua es universal en toda aquella inmensa monarchia, à saber, en todas partes de las Indias Occidentales, las Islas Philipinas, &c. con sola alguna poca diferencia en la pronunciacion, en provincias muy remotas, como se vee en otros reynos. Verdad es que ay una lengua particular en Biscaya, que se habla entre aquella gente, pero apenas se halla alguno que no hable Español. Lo mismo se puede dezir de Cataluña, adonde tambien tienen una mescla del antiguo Frances, ô language Limosin, y el Español que ya passò, pero la lengua universal siempre se conserva entre todos estados. Esto bastara para evitar la repeticion de lo mucho que otros han dicho, y para no enfadar al lector.

is a considerable help to all that have occasion to make use of them; other things that are according to the establish'd rules, must be learnt either by grammar or use, as not appertaining to this work. The Spanish proverbs and phrases are so numerous, that the curious can scarce fail of finding any thing thoroughly explain'd, which may occur to them either in reading, or conversation. The language of this Dictionary is the same that is spoken at the court of Spain, and by all the polite persons of that nation, and consequently the same that is found in all their most celebrated authors; for where other words occur, they are always noted as obsolete, or peculiar to some provinces; and it is to be observ'd, that the same is universal throughout that great monarchy, that is, in all parts of the West Indies, the Philippine Islands, &c. only allowing some small difference in the pronunciation in remote provinces, as is usual in all other countries. It is true, there is a peculiar language in Biscay, spoke among those people, yet there are scarce any of them that do not speak Spanish. The same may be said of Catalonia, where they also use a composition of old French or Limosin, and antiquated Spanish, but still the universal tongue is preserv'd among all degrees of people. This may suffice to avoid repeating too much of what has been said by others, and tiring the patience of the reader.

New SPANISH and ENGLISH D I C T I O N A R Y.

A A

A, The first letter of the alphabet, and the first of the vowels, as standing in need of no other to be pronounced, as the consonants do. In Spanish it is pronounced as in Latin, that is, opening the mouth; as in the words all, hall, &c. not as in the words hard, bard, and others of that kind. The Greeks call it Alpha, the Hebrews Aleph, the Arabs Aliph, the Phœnicians Aliaz, the Indians Alephu, and so other nations.

A is the beginning of Spanish verbs form'd out of nouns, as alancear, abraçar, acarrear, from lança, bráça, carro, &c.

A, a preposition, to, at, towards.

A, an adverb, a way of calling, as A Juan, Ho there Juhn; also a note of reprehension, as A traviesso, O unlucky one!

A, a verb, the third person singular of the verb e, or he; as Tu he, I have; Tu has, Thou hast; El ha, or a, He has.

A sometimes stands for ay; as Mi-cho's días a, many days since.

A denotes the dative case, as Dálo a Pedro, give it to Peter; sometimes the accusative, as amo a Dios, I love God; and sometimes the infinitive mood, as Voy a comer, I go to eat.

AARO'N, o Barba de Aaron, the herb wake-robbin, or calves-feet; also the proper name Aaron.

A B A

A'BA, take heed, beware; ; as 'Aba el lobo, take heed of the wolf.

ABABO'L, a poppey. Vid. Amapola.

ABACA'RES, a nation in South America.

A'EACO, the abacus, is a quadrangular piece, commonly accompanied with a cymatium, and serving instead of a corona, or drip to the capital, whereof it is the superior or highest part; that is, it supports the lower face of the architrave. So call'd from the Greek abacion, which signifies a square trencher or table.

ABACO'A, one of the Lucayan islands of America, 12 leagues long, and hardly half a league broad.

ABA'D, an Abbat, chief of a monastery of Monks of the orders of St. Benedict, St. Bernard, St. Basil, and some others. In Spain some houses of Canons Regular have Abbats. In the country in Spain they also in many places call the Parson of the parish, Abad. It is derived from the Hebrew Abá, signifying a father, superior, or master.

Prov. El Abad de donde canta yanta: Where the Abbat sings, there he gets his dinner. To signify that churchmen are to live by their function.

Prov. Como canta el Abad, responde el monacillo: As the Abbat sings, so the Acolyte, or the Clerk answers. To advise men to good breeding; because tho' a man be a superior, if he gives bad language, he may meet with worse. Our scolds say, I gave her as good as she brought, much to the same effect.

Prov. De casa del Abad, comér y llevar: At the Abbat's house eat and carry away. To shew the great hospitality of Abbats and churchmen, and especially their charity to the poor; who have enough to eat and carry away.

Prov. Abad y Ballestero: An Abbat and Cross-bow-man, or, as we now say, a Gunner. A reflection upon churchmen, who presume, contrary to the canons, to follow hunting, or such like sports. A general term to express a scandalous churchman.

Prov. Adelante está la casa del Abad: The Abbat or the Curate's house is farther on. An uncharitable way of refusing any thing that is asked, as laymen us'd to do by pilgrims, or other poor, sending them away to the Curate's or Religious Houses.

Prov. Abad avientado por un bodigo pierde ciento: A covetous Curate loses an hundred loaves or cakes to get one. This is when the Curate quarrels with a parishioner for not offering, and he never offers after. Not unlike, All covet, all lose.

Prov. Abad de garçuela comistes la olla, pedis la caçuela: Curate of garçuela eats up the pot, and asks for the pipkin. This was some very hungry curate of that place, from whom it became a proverb, applied to any man that that has had much, and still covets more.

Prov. Abad balaguero, tenid el cuello quido: Fawning Abbat, hold your neck still. Applied to any man that is over ceremonious, cringing, and fawning, and uses many indecent actions with his head.

Prov. Quando el Abad lame el cuchillo, mal para el monacillo: When the Curate licks the knife, it's bad for the Acolyte or Clerk. It's a sign the commons are short: and when the master fares ill, it must be worse with the servant.

S. ABA'D, a port in the great island of California, on the back of North America.

ABEA'DA, a beast in the East-Indies of a great bulk, cover'd with a sort of shells or scales like armour, and proof against any weapon, and having one horn in the forehead; commonly call'd a Rhinoceros.

ABADE'JO, that sort of salt-fish we call Poor Jack; the bird call'd a Wag-tail; and the fly we call the Spanish Fly, or Cantharis, us'd for raising blisters.

ABADE'SA, an Abbess of a Monastery of religious women.

ABADIA, the dignity of an Abbat, or an abbey.

ABAHADO, close cover'd, so that the steam is kept in.

ABAHAR, to cover close, to keep in steam, and therefore sometimes used for stifling, because that keeps in the breath. From baho, the steam.

ABAJAR, vid. Abaxar.

ABAI'ELS, a ridge of high mountains in South America.

ABAI'JO, vid. Abaxo.

ABALADO, Obs. loose, puffy, not lying close.

ABALANÇADO, put or thrust forward, hazarded.

ABALANÇADOR, one that thrusts forward, or hazards.

ABALANÇAR, Pref. Abalanço, abalança, abalanga; Imperf. Abalançava; Pret. Abalançé, abalançaſte, abalançaó; Imp. Abalança; to put forward, to venture, to hazard; saying or doing any thing without consideration. From the Greek ballo, to cast or throw.

ABALDONADO, reproach'd, ill spoken of; also as Abandenado, abandon'd, forsaken.

ABALDONAR, to taunt, to cast reproaches upon one, to give ill language. From balhon, a reproachful word. It is also found sometimes for Abandonar, to abandon or forsake.

ABALLAR, to move any thing with difficulty, to put away with force.

ABALORIO's, bugles.

ABA'NA, vid. Havana.

ABANADO, fann'd.

ABANADOR, a fan, or one that fans.

ABANAR, to fan.

ABANCA'Y, a small river in the kingdom of Peru in America, which falls into the great river Marañón.

ABA'NÇO, or Avanço, advance-money, this is paid beforehand.

ABANDERA'DO, a soldier or an ensign's servant that carries the colours for him; a ship, or any place that is adorn'd with many colours, flags, and streamers.

ABANDE'RAR, to hang or adorn a place with colours and streamers.

ABANDONA'DO, cast off, forsaken, abandon'd, given over.

ABANDONAR, to abandon, forsake, cast off, or give over.

ABANICARSE, to fan one's self.

ABANI'CO, a fan, such as women use.

ABANILLO, a fan.

ABANI'NO, a small sort of ruff or gorget, formerly worn by women in Spain.

ABANO, any sort of fan.

ABANTA'L, an apron. Vid. Avantál.

ABANTA'R, to row on, to pass forwards.

ABA'QUE, a small island on the South side of Hispaniola in the West Indies.

ABARATADO, cheapned, or become cheap.

ABARATADOR, one that cheapens.

ABARATAR, to sell cheap; also to cheapen, or beat down the price of a thing.

ABARCA, a sort of shoes used by country people that live on mountains or rocky places. There are two sorts of them; the one made all of wood, such as the French call Sabots, call'd in Spanish Abarcas, because they are made like a boat, which they call Barca; the other sort is of raw hides, bound about their feet with cords, which secures them against the snow.

ABARCA'DO, shod with Abarcas; also grasp'd or secur'd within one's arms.

ABARCAR, to clasp in the arms, to rake together much wealth, to assume command, to aspire to honour. Hence the Prov. Quién mucho abarca, poco aprieta: He that grasps at much, holds fast but little; or, All covet, all loss.

ABARLOAR, to sail to windward, to gain upon a wind, to tack from side to side.

ABARRA'DO, dash'd or flung against a wall, or other place.

ACHOTE; it has no other name in English or any other language, this being the Indian name. It is a hard substance of a very deep red, formerly used to be put into chocolate to give it a good colour, and because it is an excellent peccoral. Ray, in his history of plants, gives this account of it: The Mau-can, or Ren-can tree, between a shrub and a tree, bears a fruit in a cod two or three fingers long, about as big as a plum. In each cod there are thirty or forty seeds, or grains, each fastned to a little stalk, in the shape of a sharp cone, flattened on both sides. The colour of these seeds or grains is a bright scarlet; they are damp with a juice that dyes the hands, if they touch it. These seeds new gather'd are soft like those of an apple; when dry, they turn of a deep red; these ground with water, and made up into balls or cakes, are sent over into Europe. Thus far Ray, who calls it Achotil; but the true name the Spaniards call it by is Achote. This steep'd in urine dyes linnen so that it never washes out.

ADLE'SIOS, hablar adesios, it is a Spanish proverb, signifying to speak nothing to the purpose, or, tho' it be to the purpose, to talk to those that will not mind, or at least will not admit of what is said. It is taken from the Ephesians banishing of Hermodorus, only because he was more virtuous than they; for they would give no ear to what he or his friends could say to dissuade them, or else thought it all to no purpose. Or from the same Ephesians persecuting the apostles at the instigation of Alexander the copper-smith, without hearkening to reason, but drowning all with the cry of Great is Diana of Ephesus. The ignorant people have made the two words into one, and chang'd the ph into an s, which has now prevail'd, and very many speak it without knowing what it means.

Prov. Baylar el agua delante: To dance with the water before one. That is, to be very nimble or quick in performing one's duty, or pleasing another. Taken from the maids watering the rooms and courts in Spain in hot weather, against their masters come, doing it nimbly, as if they were dancing, as they carry and scatter the water before them.

Prov. Llevar el agua a su molino: To carry the water to his own mill. That is, to turn all things to one's own advantage.

Prov. Tenér el agua a la garganta: To be up to the neck in water. To be in imminent danger.

Prov. Desfado como agua de mayo: With'd for like rain in May. This they say of any thing they earnestly desire or covet, because in Spain rain in May fills the corn, and prevents any scarcity, which often follows a dry May, and is good for the vineyards.

Prov. Agua de marzo peor que mancha en paño: March rain is worse than a spot in cloth. Because the spot may be raken out, but the rain that falls in March spoils the corn so that it cannot be retriev'd.

Prov. Agua fría sarna cría, agua roxa sarna escofca: Cold water breeds the itch, red water cures the itch. That is, cold water is unwholesome, but wine, signify'd by red water, cures diseases. A good fellow's proverb. We say, Water breeds frogs in the belly, and wine kills the worms.

Prov. Agua fría y pan caliente nunca hicieron buen vientre: Cold water and hot bread never did well in the belly. There is another to this same purpose below.

Prov. Agua al bigo, y a la p'ra vino: Water to the fig, and wine to the pear. That is, drink water with the fig, and wine with the pear; because they reckon the fig of a hot nature, and the pear cold.

Prov. Agua de mayo, pan para todo el año: Rain in May is bread for all the year. That is, it fills and brings up the corn, so that there is a plentiful harvest, and no want all the year.

Prov. Agua fría y pan caliente mata la gente: Cold water and hot bread kill people. That is, they are both unwholesome.

Prov. Agua de por San Juan quita vino, y no da pan: Rain about midsummer spoils the wine, and does not mend the corn. It being then harvest in Spain, the corn receives no advantage, and the grapes at that time have need of fair weather to ripen them, whereas much rain rots them.

Prov. Agua de cepas y orinal, te pondrán en el hospital: Water of the vines and the urinal will carry you to the hospital. That is, drunkenness, signified by water of the vine, which is no other than wine, will make you diseas'd; and the urinal, by which is signified the charge of doctors and apothecaries will impoverish you, so that you will come at last to the hospital.

Prov. Agua ni enferma, ni embeoda, ni adéuda: Water neither makes sick, nor drunk, nor impoverishes.

Prov. Água trotada tanto tal como ceceada: Water that has been trotted over is as good as barley. That is, it is good for horses to drink water that has been disturbed, as generally counted better than the clearest.

Prov. Água mala hervida y colada: Bad water must be boil'd and strain'd. That is, to make it pure and wholesome.

Prov. Água sobre pólvora, y gelo sobre todo: Water upon dust, and frost upon both. This, they say, is good to bring up the corn; that is, plentiful rain after the summer's drought, and then nipping frosts in winter to kill weeds, and keep the corn back.

Prov. Água de agosto, azafrañ, y miel, y mosto: Rain in August produces fashion, honey, and wine.

Prov. Água sobre água, ni vale seya, ni capa: Neither cloak nor coat will hold out against rain upon rain. That is, when repeated showers fall upon wet cloaths, they cannot hold out. Or metaphorically, when misfortunes come one upon the neck of another, there is no withstanding them.

Prov. Água abaixo a la cortina, atmaras a la marina: Keep always down along with the water, that is, the river, and you'll hit the way to the seaside. That is, follow always the sure way, as rivers certainly run to the sea, and, tho' it be long, you will certainly come to your intended end.

Prov. Água sobre água, ni cura ni lava: Water upon water neither cures nor washes. That is, too much of one thing is good for nothing.

Prov. Água vertida no toda cogida: Water that is spilt cannot all be taken up. What is profusely and lavishly thrown away can never be gather'd up again.

Prov. Água de sierra, y sombra de piedra: Water of the mountain, and shade of stone. That is, they are the best, as water that runs from rocky hills, and the shade of a stone wall better than that of trees.

Prov. Água y sol para las Luértas es lagarta, y para las viñas pulgón: Rain and sunshine are caterpillars in orchards, and worms in vineyards. That is, much rain with hot sunshine gleams between, destroy both orchards and vineyards, and breed insects and worms that devour them.

Prov. Água coge con harnéro quien se cree de ligero: He takes up water in a sieve who is easy of belief. That is, he is deceiv'd, and labours in vain, who credits every thing he hears.

Prov. Del água mansa me guarde Diós, que de la bráva me guardaré yo: God defend me from the still water, for I'll keep my self from the rough. That is the plain sense, God keep me from being allured to go upon the water when it is fine and smooth, and so running my self into danger; for when I see the water rough, and stormy weather, I'll be sure to keep off it. But the figurative sense is, God defend me from fawning and fair-spoken deceitful people, who seem all saints without, and are devils within; for I shall my self take care to avoid those that are publicly boisterous or scandalous.

Prov. Aora hervia, y ya es água fria: Just now it boiled, and now it is cold water. Metaphorically of one that is in a great heat or passion, and is frightened into a sudden calmness.

Prov. Con água passada no muele molino: The mill does not grind with water that is run by. What is past can do us no kindness.

Prov. Del água mansa te guarde, que la ravia presto se passa: Take heed of a soft rain, for that which falls violent is soon over. This is true in the plain sense of the words, but metaphorically signifies, you must have a care of patient men, who are not easily mov'd, but, when anger'd, hold it long; for cholerick hasty persons are generally soonest appeased.

Prov. El água sin color, olor, ni sabor: Water must have neither colour, taste, nor smell.

Prov. Mas vale un água entre abril y mayo, que los buéyes y el carro: A good shower of rain betwixt April and May is worth more than the cart and oxen. That is, to show how seasonable rain is in April and just the beginning of May.

Prov. No os lavaréis desta con quinta água ay en el río: You will not wash away this stain with all the water in the river. You'll never wipe off this stain.

Prov. Mas vale água del cielo, que todo el riego: Water from heaven, that is, rain, is better than any watering. Experience shows this to be true.

Prov. No écles água en la sal, que te saldrá mal: Do not throw water into salt, for it will turn to an ill account. That is, do not provoke your friends, lest you lose them.

Prov. Per tirbia que esté, no digas desta água no beberé: Tho' it be never so much troubled, do not say I will not drink of this water. That is, tho' a thing be never so mean, do not say I will never sloop to it, or I shall never be in such a mean condition, since nothing is certain in this life.

Prov. Quien echa água en la garrufa de golpe, mas derrama que ella coge: He who pours water into a bottle hastily spils more than goes in. That is, he who is too rash and hasty in his business does more harm than good. The more haste the worse speed.

* AMBA'R, o Ambargris, ambergrise, the wholsomest and most delicious of all perfumes, but what it is, is not yet known, some affirming it to be the sperm of the whale, others the dung of some creature in the sea, or the foam condens'd; and others, that it flows from some source in the sea; and others, that it grows in the sea as the fungi do on stones or trees, and is cast up by the sea in stormy weather. The best amber is that which is light, and of a clear grey or ash-colour, and the blacker the worse it is. The rich Moors and Indians use much amber, and the Chineses much more, esteeming it good for the brain and stomach, and as a provocative. It is hot and dry in the second degree. It strengthens the brain and heart, comforts weak limbs, sharpens the understanding, enlivens the senses, restores the memory, removes melancholy and obstructions in the matrix, is good against the palsy, falling-sickness, and convulsions, corrects infectious air, and very much helps old people, and those that are of cold constitutions. Chrif. Acost. nat. hist. E. Ind.

Ambár is also the yellow amber, of which we have beads and other curiosities.

AMBEARES, the fruit of a large tree in India, with long narrow leaves, which are of a light pleasant green, and full of veins, that make it beautiful. The flower or blossom is white and small, the fruit as big as a green walnut, the colour a lighter green, and the taste harsh; but when ripe it turns yellow, has a better smell, and the taste is a pleasant tartness. The pulp of it is hard, consisting of many sinews knit in a mass. It serves to make sauce to meat, being tart; and when ripe is eaten with salt and vinegar, and will keep so a long time. It creates an appetite, and the Indians reckon it good against cholera. Chrif. Acost. nat. hist. E. Ind.

AMBERES, the city Antwerp in the Low Countries.

AMBIA, a liquor in Peru, which flows from a spring near the sea, of the colour and consistence of honey, and smelling like Tacamabaca. It cures inveterate diseases proceeding from cold causes, and takes away all aches and pains of that nature. It seems hot in the third degree, and very viscous. Monardes, fol. 108.

AMIGA, a female friend; when meant of a friend to a man, also taken in an ill sense.

AMIGABLE, friendly.

AMIGABLEM^TE, in friendly manner.

AMIGAR, to make or to become friends.

AMIGO, a friend, when meant of a woman's friend, taken in an ill sense, Lat. amicus.

Prov. Amigo reconciliado enemigo doblado: A reconciled friend is a double enemy. To show the danger there is of a false reconciliation.

Prov. Amigo quebrado, soldado, mas nunca sano: A broken friend may beoulder'd, but will never be sound. To the same effect as that above.

Prov. Amigo de todos y de ninguno, todo es uno: A friend to all and to none is the same thing. To show that there is no such thing as being a general friend to every body.

Prov. Amigo de taza de vino: A pot-companion.

Prov. Amigo Burgalés, y capáto de baldrés, y cavallo de andadura, poco dura: A friend of the city Burgos, a sheep-skin shoe, and a pacing horse, do not last long.

Prov. Amigo del buen tiempo mudase con el viento: A friend in prosperity changes like the wind.

Prov. Aquel es tu amigo, que te quita de riñdo: He is your friend that brings you out of trouble or quarrels. Meaning that he is not so, who brings tales to breed discontent.

Prov. Aquéllos son ricos que tienen amigos: They are rich who have friends. That is, real ones.

Prov. A tu amigo gánale un juego, y bévelo luego: Win a game of your friend, and drink out the winnings immediately. That is, do not play with him for much money, because play is the occasion of quarrels.

Prov. A tu amigo dile la mentira; si te guardare secreto, dile la verdad: Tell your friend a lie, and if he keeps your council, then tell him the truth. That is, make trial of him.

Prov. Bistado amigo, mas si fuéa perro, ya os luxiéra mordido: Look for it, friend, but if it had been a dog it had bit you. We say the same, when a man looks about for that which is before his face.

Prov. De amigo reconciliado guárdate como del diablo: Be as cautious of a reconciled friend, as you would be of having to do with the devil. To show the danger of a false reconciliation.

The next is to the same effect.

Prov. De amigo reconciliado, y de viento por borado, y de hombre que va dissimulado: From a reconciled friend, from wind that comes in at a hole or cranny, and from a man that walks demurely. Subintelligitur, good Lord deliver us. They are three dangerous things.

Prov. Mas valen amigos en la plaza; que dineros en el arca: Friends in the market are better than money in the chest. To express the great advantage of having friends abroad.

Prov. Mas vale buen amigo que pariente primo: A good friend is better than a near kinsman.

Prov. No vendas a tu amigo, ni del rico compres trigo: Do not sell to your friend, nor buy corn of a rich man. Because buying and selling is often the cause of disobliging friends, and rich men always keep their corn to sell it dear.

Prov. Quién de todos es amigo, o es muy pobre, o es muy rico: He who is a friend to all men, is either very poor, or very rich. For, if poor, he courts all men; and if rich, all court him.

Prov. Quién es amigo del vino, enemigo es de si mismo: He who is a friend to wine is an enemy to himself.

Prov. Dos amigos de una bolsa, el uno canta, y el otro llora: Two friends of one purse, the one sings, the other weeps. That is, there can be no friendship in a common purse. Or, as we say, Two hands in a dish, and one in a purse.

Prov. Al buen amigo con tu pan y con tu vino: To a good friend with your bread and your wine. That is, let your house or table be free to a good friend.

AMIGOTE, a half friend.

AMIGUILLA, a little she friend, or mistress. The diminutive of amiga.

AMILANA'DO, scar'd, or frighted.

AMILANA'RSE, to be daunted or frighted, as birds are when they see the kite. From milano, a kite.

AMISTA'D, friendship. Lat. amicitia.

Prov. Amistad de yérno, sol de invierno: A son-in-law's friendship is like the winter sun. That is, but just warm, and not lasting.

A'MITO, an amice, that is, a square linnen cloth the priest ties about his neck, hanging down behind under the alb, when he vests to say mass.

AMMÓN, the proper name often found in scripture and profane history; but we call David's son Ammon, and the Egyptian deity Jupiter Hammon. The Spaniards call both Ammon.

AMMONIA'CO, gum ammoniac, which comes from a tree in Egypt, so call'd from the oracle of Ammon, near which it grew; used in physick. See Ray, p. 1844.

A M O

A'MO, a master.

Prov. Haz lo que tu amo te manda, y sientate con el a la mesa: Do what your master bids you, and sit down at the table with him.

Prov. Lo bien ganado se pierde, y lo malo ello, y su amo: What's well got is lost, and what is ill got master and all. That is, the best got wealth is subject to casualties, but what is ill got, involves him that gets it so in ruin.

AMODORRADO, sick of a lethargy, or seiz'd with a drowsiness.

AMODORRARSE, to fall sick of a lethargy, or be seiz'd with a heaviness. From modorra, a lethargy.

AMODORRECE'RSE, idem.

AMODORRIDO, vid. Amodorrado.

AMOLLENTADURA, Obf. softening or slackening.

AMOLLENTA'R, Obf. vid. amollar.

AMOMO, a plant bearing a sort of small fruit in clusters, of a very hot, astringent, and drying nature. See it in Ray, p. 1697, verb. Amomum.

AMONDONGA'DO, gross, all of a heap, all belly. From mondongo, black-pudding.

AMONESTACIÓN, a warning or admonition; also the banns bid in churches before matrimony, then used in the plural amonestaciones, corruptly call'd by some municiones.

AMONESTA'DO, warn'd, admonish'd. AMONESTADOR, a Warner, an admonisher.

AMONESTAMIENTO, for amonestación, but little used.

AMONESTA'R, to warn, to admonish. From the Latin moneo.

AMONIO, an herb call'd amony.

AMONTA'DO, amounted; also got into the mountains.

AMONTA'R, to amount; also to get up into the mountains.

AMONTÓN, by the heap.

AMONTONA'DO, heap'd up.

AMONTONADAMENTE, by heaps.

AMONTONADOR, a heaper.

AMONTONAMIENTO, a heaping.

AMONTONA'R, to heap. From montón, a heap.

AMOR, love. Lat. amor.

AMORES, commonly taken in the worst sense for a lewd amorous passion; as also for common courtship, or making love.

Amor de hortelano, the plant called burdocks.

Prov. Amor de niña, o de niño, agua en cesto: Childrens love is water in a basket. That is, it soon passes away, like water taken up in a basket.

Prov. Amor de monja fuego de estopa: Nuns love is like a fire of tow. That is, very hot, yet is but a blaze, no sooner kindled than dead; for being only a little talk through a grate, as it comes lightly, as lightly it passes away.

Prov. Amor de padre, o de madre, que todo lo otro es ayre: A father's love, or a mother's, for all other love is like wind. The love of parents is so sincere, so passionate, and so disinterested, that all other love compared to it seems but mere wind and vanity.

Prov. Amor loco, yo por vos, y vos por otro: Mad love, I follow you, and you follow another. This expresses the folly of love, when a man loves and follows a woman who he knows has placed her heart elsewhere.

Prov. Amor trompéro (o amor mesenéro) cuántas véo, tantas quéro: Inconstant love, running round like a top, all I see I love. It expresses the folly of some men, who court and make love to all the women they meet; comparing their love to a top, which the more it is whipp'd, the more it turns round; so they, the more they are scorned and fluried at, the more they turn to vent their folly. It is also call'd mesenéro, that is, the love of an inn, where wenches pretend to love all comers and goers.

Prov. Amor de señor, amor de burón: A lord or a great man's love is like a ferret's love. That is, the love great men pretend, is only to compass their designs; their intention is to play the ferret, to ruine you, and then leave you.

Prov. Amor de monja, y fuego de estopa, y viento de culo, todo es uno: Nuns love, fire made of tow, and wind of the arse, is all alike. Part of this proverb was mentioned above, and explain'd; this is the same, with only the addition, that to love nuns is not worth a fart.

Prov. Amores nuevos olvidan viejos: New love makes the old be forgot. One nail drives out another.

Prov. Amores nuevos casa con pucheros: New love is like a house full of pipkins. That is, it stands upon ticklish terms, it is easy to be broke. Otherwise, love is so expensive, that it reduces the lover from a good pot of meat to a pipkin. Or else it may be taken in that sense where hazér pucheros signifies to make faces, as children do when they cry; so amorous young fops make many ugly faces, and sometimes shed tears for their mistresses.

Prov. Amores, dolores, y dineros, no pueden estar secretos: Love, pain, and money cannot be kept private.

Prov. El amor de Dios florece, todo lo al peréce: The love of God flourishes, all other things perish. A religious proverb, to express the uncertainty of the things of this world, and persuade the love of God, which is the only certain good.

Prov. El amor de los años entra a cozes y a bozados: The love of all is beaten in with kicking and biting.

A reproof for boisterous lovers.

Prov. El amor y la guadana quieren fuerza, y quieren maña: Love and the scythe require force and art. That is, it is requisite in love to use importunity, signify'd by force, and industry or art at the same time, as well as in mowing, where a man, tho' never so strong, cannot manage a scythe, unless he has the knack of it.

Prov. Los amores del gata riñendo entran: Cats love begins by quarrelling. As we daily see in catterwawling. This is to the same effect as that above of the ass.

Prov. Un amor saca otro: One love drives out another. The same as that above, Amores nuevos olvidan viejos.

Prov. Al amor el remedio es tierra en medio: The remedy for love is land between. That is, absence is the best cure for love.

Prov. Lo perdido váya por amor de Dios: Let that which is lost be given for the love of God. A reproof to those who give nothing but what they can't tell what to do with, or what is of no use to them.

Prov. Quién casa por amores, malos días y buenas noches: They that marry for love, have bad days and good nights. Because very often when they marry for love there wants a fortune; or else they discover many faults, which before were hid, and this makes the days uneasy, but the nights having the enjoyment that was desir'd, forget the trouble of the day.

Prov. Váanse los amores, y quedan los dolores: Love passes away, and the pain remains. That is, rash love, after enjoyment, turns into trouble and sorrow.

Prov. Quando el còxo de amor muere, que hará quién andar puede? When the lame man dies for love, what will become of him that can go? That is, when vile people take upon them, what may not their betters do?

AMORADUX, sweet marjorum. Arab. AMORATA'DO, of a mulberry colour; From mora, a mulberry.

AMORDAZA'DO, gagg'd.

AMORDAZA'R, to gag. From mordaza, a gag.

AMOREA'DO, shown the fire, or gently warm'd at the fire.

AMOREA'R, to show to the fire, to warm gently. This word borrow'd from amor, because in Spanish, al amor de la lumbre, is at the air of the fire.

AMORES SE'COS, burdocks; so call'd, because they stick close.

ANACA'LO, a man that carries the bread to and from the bake-house.

ANACA'RDO, a sort of fruit very common in India, and like a bean. On the tree, or fresh gathered, it is of a brightish green; but dry, of a shining black. Within it is a white substance like an almond, and between the white nut and the black shell is a very corroding oil. It is reckoned venomous, yet when put into a sort of pickle, like that of the olives, it is sold in the markets and eaten. One of them held on the point of a knife over a candle, as it burns makes a wonderful cracking, and casts forth such abundance of sparks, that they look like rays, inasmuch that they impose upon ignorant people, and make them believe they see spirits in them, and learn of them what they desire to know. This cheat is used by their fortune-tellers, who returning ambiguous answers to all questions, still preserve their reputation. Christ. Acost. nat. hist. E. Ind.

ANAGRAMA, an anagram, the letters of a name so transposed as to compose another word, or words.

ANALOGIA, analogy, like reason, proportion, relation.

ANALÉS, annals. Lat.

ANA'NAS, this fruit was first carried into India from Brazil, and has throve well. It is as big as a small limon, very yellow and odoriferous, when ripe, very delicious to the taste, and juicy. Only one grows upon a stalk, which is as tall as an artichok, with many small ones about it, which, when they gather the great one, they plant, and each of them produces a plant, growing up in a year. This fruit is hot and moist, and is eaten dipp'd in wine. There is another sort which they call Ananas Bravo, or Wild Ananas, which grows as high as a horse-man's spear, smooth, strait, round, and as thick as an orange-tree, the leaves prickly, and a great knot of them at the foot of it. The roots of it are entangled under ground, and sprout up again, one tree producing another, so that they make hedges. On the boughs grows a fruit they call the Wild Ananas, because like the other. It is as big as a melon, of a pleasant red, all divided like the cypress-apple, but at a distance like the pine-apple; it is not very pleasant to the taste, and therefore eaten by few. There comes a moisture from the tree and roots, which is of good use in physick. Chr. fr. Acost. nat. hist. E. Ind.

ANAPE'LO, wolfsbane, a poisonous herb.

ANAPÚYA, a territory in the province of Venezuela in South America.

A'sNO, an ass. Lat. asinus.

A'sno campés, or campesino, a wild ass.

A'sno sardisco, an ass of the Sardinian breed, which are very serviceable.

Prov. El ásno a la viñuela: The ass to the lute. This they say when a man pretends to those things he does not understand; as an ignorant person pretending to talk learnedly, which is as if an ass should pretend to play upon a lute.

Prov. Dádle el áfno: Put on the ass. We say, Drive on, car-man; which is to say, a man would rather be hang'd than marry an ugly woman. For in Spain criminals are carried to execution upon an ass, instead of the cart used in England.

Prov. El áfno y la muger a pálos se ban de vencer: An ass and a woman are to be conquer'd with a cudgel. The occasion of this proverb, they say, was a carrier, who coming to a narrow passage, could not get his ass to go on, and fell a beating of him unmercifully, till a traveller coming by, and reproving him for so doing, he bid him hold his peace, for an ass and a woman were to be overcome with a cudgel. The traveller, who had an ill wife, went home and try'd the experiment upon her, which he found had good effect, and so the proverb held good.

Prov. No compres áfno de recuéro, ni te cases con hija de mesonero: Do not buy an ass of a carrier, nor marry an inn-keeper's daughter. The reason, because if a carrier sells his ass, which he has so much use for himself, he must either be very bad, or old, or fold dear; and for the inn-keeper's daughter, she is exposed to so much company, and so many temptations, that it is hard for her to come off untainted.

Prov. Quién al áfno alaba, tal hijo le nâsaa: He that praises the ass, may he have such a son born to him. That is, may he that is over-fond of mean things never know better, but may all he has be mean.

Prov. A'sno cómo mas avias de mardugar: Lame ass, you ought to get up earlier. This is apply'd to those who are dull, slow, or unhandy, and therefore cannot compass their business in time: It advises them to rise early, that they may have leisure to perform their affairs, since nature has obstructed their doing them as quick as others.

Prov. A'sno con oro alcânçalo todo: An ass loaded with gold overtakes every thing. That is, tho' a man be never so much an ass, if he has but money enough, he may do what he pleases.

Prov. A'sno malo cabe casa aguija sin pálo: An ill ass puts on when he is near home without beating. This we see in all jades, which when they know they are drawing towards home, will go without whip or spur.

Prov. Ásno coto, y hombre coto, y el diablo, todo es uno: A lame ass, and a red-hair'd man, and the devil, are all one. So ill a conceit they have of red hair; and as for a lame beast, every body knows it is plague enough.

Prov. Ásno de mil os lobos les comen: The wolves devour the ass that belongs to many owners. Because if he has many owners none of them look to him. Therefore we say, what is every body's business, is no body's business.

Prov. Burlas con el ásno duros ha en la cara con el rabo: Jest with an ass, and he'll slap you in the face with his tail. If you make your self familiar, or jest with mean people, you must expect no better than a slap in the face with their tail; that is, some brutish words or actions.

Prov. Cayó la el ásno en el alcañal: The ass is fallen among the green barley. This is to express a mischance attended with some good circumstance, which alleviates, or quite blots it out; as is signify'd by the ass falling among green barley, where tho' he had the ill luck to fall, yet he may fill his belly to enable him to go on.

Prov. Desqué no pu'o al ásno, torna-se al albarda: Since he could not be reveng'd upon the ass, he falls upon the pack-saddle. This shews the humour of many men, who when offended, and dare not show their resentment on them that caus'd it, vent their passion on their wives, children, servants, or others they have power over.

Prov. Habló el ásno, y dixo, ho, ho: The ass spoke, and said, ho, ho. For those who after a long silence, as if they had been studying sentences, break with something which is not at all to the purpose.

Prov. Mas vale ásno que me lleve, que caválo que ne derriue: I had rather have an ass that will carry me, than a horse that will throw me. That is, I had rather be contented with a moderate conveniency, or with indifferent things which I can compass and manage, than with greatness that may cost me a fall.

Prov. Mas vale con mal ásno contentár, que la leña acéptas traír: It is better to strive with an ill ass, than to carry the wood upon one's back. A bad servant is better than to do one's own work.

Prov. Al ásno muerto la cevada al rabo: When the ass is dead, the barley at his tail. A reproof to them that are slow in doing good, even when it is too late, or even then misplace it; as it is after a poor beast is starv'd to lay the provender to its tail.

Prov. Al ásno y al mulo, la carga al cilo: The ass and the mule must have the burthen upon the rump. That is, they must have it laid on behind; but in another sense, that brutish men must be cudgell'd, as mules and asses are, behind; for that is also a load, according to the Spanish phrase, Una carga de púlos; that is, a good beating.

Prov. Sufre el ásno la carga, mas no la sobrecarga: The ass bears the burthen, but not an over-burthen. That is, we must not lay too much upon a man, tho' he be never so patient; for is you over-burthen him, like the ass, he'll throw all down.

Prov. Un ásno entre muchas monas cecanle todas: When one ass is among many monkeys, they all make faces at him. When a cully falls into the hands of many sharpers, they all fleece him. Or when many women make a fool of a man.

Prov. A un ásno bástale una albánda: One pannel is enough for one ass. One employment is enough for one man.

Prov. A ásno modorro arriero loco: A mad carrier for a jadish ass. Because a mad fellow will always be thrashing, talking, and putting him on.

Prov. Ésso le esta como al ásno los corales: That becomes him as a coral does an ass. We say, such a one looks like a sow faddled.

Prov. No vée siete sobre un ásno: He sees not seven as he sits upon an ass. A man had seven asses, drove six of them, and rode upon the other; as he was going, he several times counted them, and still found but six, forgetting that he had one under him, till enquiring of those he met for the seventh, one shew'd him that he was upon, and then he found out his mistake. Thence when a man does not see or conceive the most obvious things, they say, he cannot see seven when he sits upon an ass. It is not unlike, he cannot see wood for trees.

Prov. Si uno, dos, y tres te dizen que eres ásno, ponte un rabo: If one, two, and three tell you you are an ass, put on a tail. That is, whatever is generally said of you, you must of necessity acquiesce, for either it is true, or it will be impossible for you to undeceive the world.

Prov. Ásno cargado de oro síbe ligero por una montaña: An ass loaded with gold climbs a mountain nimbly. This, tho' not verified in the literal sense, is to express how readily men undertake any thing, and with what alacrity they perform it for the lucre of gold.

Prov. Caér de su ásno: To fall from his ass. When a man is obstinate, and will take no advice, and discovers his errors too late, they say, he falls from his ass; that is, he was before like an ass mounted on his own folly, and is then fallen down, being made sensible of his ignorance.

Prov. O morirá el ásno, o quién le aguija: Either the ass will die, or his driver. When the death of one, of two, or more, will deliver a man out of trouble. Taken from a man that undertook for a maintenance and good reward to make his ass speak in a certain term of years; and a friend asking him how he came to undertake such an impossibility, upon forfeiture of life if he fail'd; he answer'd, either the lord will die, meaning him that kept them, or the ass, or the driver, before that time.

AZIBAR, aloes; it is made of the juice of an herb call'd by the Portuguese Herba babosa, whereof there is great store in Cambaya, Bengala, and other parts, but that of the island Socotra is most valued, and therefore called Aloes Socotrina. This plant is not unlike our houseleek, and in Spain the common people will hang one of them with the root and all in their houses, and it has such a natural moisture, that it holds green all the year. The best aloes is that which is clearest, closest, and freest from sand and dirt, and of a liver colour; brittle, that dissolves soonest, and is bitterest. It is hot in the first degree, and dry in the third. It stops bloody fluxes, dries up inveterate sores, heals fresh wounds, and brings flesh upon wounds, particularly in the privy parts. It is put to many other uses, which may be seen at large in Acosta's nat. hist. of E. Ind.

AZOGAR, to mix, rub, or temper with quicksilver, or to infect with quicksilver.

AZÓGUE, quicksilver or mercury. It is dug out of mines in stones together with the vermilion, for those two are always found together. The stones are beaten small, and put into crucibles close stopp'd, where they are run with fire, the quicksilver ascending with the smoke till it meets with some body, on which it consolidates; or, if it meets with no body, it ascends till it grows cold, and then falls down again congeal'd. They do not uncover the cru-cibles to take out the metal till cold, because the steam of them would kill, or at least endanger those about it. In the West Indies the quicksilver is kept in skins. Jos. Acost. nat. hist. W. Ind. l. 4. c. 11. p. 220. The word is Arabick.

Azogue is also a market-place, so called because of the concourse of people always moving, like quicksilver; not much used in Spain at present in this sense, but in Portugal it continues.

Prov. En el azogue quien mal dize, mal oyé: In the market they that give ill language, hear as bad.

BALSAMA'R, to embalm.

BAESAMINA, the herb baulm.

BA'LSAMO, balsam of the Indies; it is famous for its delicate scent, and more for its wonderful effects in healing of wounds, and several cures of distempers. The tree this balsam comes from is as big as the pomegranate-tree, or somewhat bigger, and something like it. There is of it white, red, green, and black. It comes from the tree cutting a gash in it, whence it flows in abundance. Some is pure, which they call Opobalsamum, and distills from the tree; the other, which is not so good, is extracted from the wood, bark, and leaves boil'd and press'd, and this they call Xilobalsamum; besides some adulterate it, mixing other liquors with it. The plenty only makes it less valued, for it is no way inferior to the celebrated balsam of the holy land. It is produced in New Spain, and the provinces of Guatemala and Chiapa; but the best is that of the island of Tolu, not far from Carthagena. This is generally white, and the white is better than the red, this better than the green, and the black the worst. F. J. Acost. nat. hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 28. p. 263. Those that desire it may see much more in Monardes, fol. 9 and 84.

Balsamo. To the account above out of Acosta concerning that balsam of the West Indies, it is not amiss to add a word out of Ray concerning that of the East. He says, it is a small shrubby tree growing as high as privet, bearing very few leaves, like rue. The precious balsam flows from its branches, an incision being made into them. This was the balsam and its trees growing in former ages in Palestine and other eastern countries. At present there are great trees of natural balsam in several parts of America, but particularly in the province of Chile. Pag. 1755, verb. balsamum.

BEHETRIAS, are lordships or liberties free from the subjection to any lord, but what they choose at pleasure, and can discard at will. The law of Spain defines it thus: Behetria signifies an inheritance belonging to it self, free from him that lives in it, and can receive for its lord whom it pleases. These are the words of the law literally translated. There were two sorts of them, the one call'd behetrias de mar a mar, or from sea to sea; to express, that they might choose for their lord when they pleased, from the ocean to the Mediterranean. The other sort was call'd behetrias de entre parientes, that is, among kindred, which were oblig'd to choose their lord of certain families, whose right it was. These are all suppress'd and incorporated into the crown of Spain, tho' they retain the name and some small privileges. The etymology is so uncertain that it is not worth mentioning. They that will may see it in Covarrubias. But because these free places are generally full of noise and confusion for want of a sovereign power, therefore behetria is us'd to signify any tumultuous assembly, or confused disorderly noise; or, as we say, Dover court, all talkers and no hearers.

BETA, a beet-root.

BETA'NZOS, a city in the kingdom of Galicia in Spain, three leagues north of Comilla, a good port, the place walled, its territory fruitful, inhabited by 1000 families, has two parishes, two monasteries of men, three chapels, one hospital. Antiently call'd Flavium Brigantium.

BETILI', it is a tender plant that runs up a stick, and the leaf is the delight of the Asticks: for men, and women, from the prince to the peasant, have no greater pleasure than to chew it all day in company, and no visit begins or ends without this herb. Before it they always chew the areca, describ'd in its place, that the coolness of this, as they say, may temper the heat of the other; and they lay a little dissolv'd lime on the betile leaf to colour and soften its biting taste. It spends not so well in any part of Asia as in the Philippine islands, where the areca is soft and easy to chew. The Spaniards make a composition of both herbs with lime, which they call bujo, and carry it in curious little boxes, to chew it every moment abroad and at home. The betile makes the lips so fine, red and beautiful, that if the European ladies could, they would purchase it for the weight in gold. Gemelli, vol. 3 lib. 1. cap. 8.

BETIS, the ancient name of the famous river in Spain, now call'd Guadalquivir, which gave its name to the province Betica.

B E Z

BEZ for vez.

BEZAA'R, o piédra bezaár, the bezoar-stone. In the West-Indies these are found in the maw or belly of the Indian sheep, (of which you may see more verb llamas.) Sometimes they find in a sheep but one, sometimes two, three or four; some less than small nuts, others as big as pigeons eggs, and the author has seen one as big as an orange. In shape some are round, some oval, others irregular. As to colour, there are black, white, grey, greenish and gold colour. They are made as it were of several layers or crusts one upon another. Several creatures are said to produce them besides the llamas, as the vicuñas, tungas, and cypris. The vicuñas commonly yield the largest, and the tungas the best. The stone is of excellent use in physick. The best bezoar stones are those brought from the East-Indies, the next to them those of Peru, and the last in order those of New Spain. It has often been found that these stones grow in the bealls maw or belly, upon some bit of iron or stick that the creature has swallow'd, these things being found in the middle of them, which makes some people believe they are counterfeits, but it is most certain they are not. F. Jof. A. of Nat. Hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. chap. 42. pag. 256. Christ. Acosta, Nat. Hist. of E. Ind. says, the bezoar is found there in a creature somewhat resembling a goat and a deer, very swift, which the Persians call pazan. The Persians, Arabs and Corazans call this stone pazar, from the beast. To know the true bezoar from the counterfeit, they take a little dust of lime, and wetting any part of the stone with the tip of the tongue rub it upon that dust, which, if true, it dyes of a fine green; if false, it either alters not the colour at all, or very little. It is good against all poisons, infections, melancholy, and inveterate distempers; to cherish the spirits, to drive any thing from the heart, to create an appetite, and many more diseases. Christ. Acosta, Nat. Hist. East. Ind.

BISCA'YA, the province of Biscay in the north of Spain, which gives name to the well known bay of Biscay. It is properly a small province bounded by Asturias, Old Castile, Guipuscoa, and Alava ; but most people under this acceptance include both the provinces last named, by which means they extend it much farther. Formerly it had particular lords to whom it was subject, who were of the noble family of Haró. Henry the second king Spain, created his brother D. Tello de Castilla, who was, as well as himself, a bastard, earl of Biscay ; but this title died with him, and the country was annex'd to the crown, the kings of Spain to this day styling themselves lords of Biscay.

BISCA'YNO, a Biscayner.

Prov. Biscayno necio taracón de en medio : The silly Biscayner is for the middle piece. The Castilians make a jest of the Biscayners, as we do of some other people, and with as little reason, for they are an ingenious people, only they do not speak the Spanish properly. The occasion of this proverb was, that two Castilians being at dinner with a Biscayner, they thought to put a jest upon him, and cheat him of the middle piece of the fish ; therefore the one said he did not love the head, the other said he could not eat the tail : The Biscayner cut the fish in three pieces, and gave the tail to him that said he could not eat the head, and the head to the other that did not love the tail, saying as above, the silly Biscayner is for the middle piece, and so retorted the jest upon those that thought to play upon him.

B O D

BóDA, a wedding. The etymology not known.

BóDAS, the same as bóda, being indifferently used either in the singular or plural number.

Andarse de bóda en bóda, to go from wedding to wedding. That is, to live an idle spunging life, always running from one good house to another, or from feast to feast, without taking any pains, or minding any thing but mirth.

Prov. Ain se come el pan de la bóda: The wedding bread is still eaten. That is, the wedding feasting is scarce over. It is all love and mirth. It is honeymoon still.

Prov. A la bóda de Don García lleva pan en la capilla: Carry bread in your hood to Don García's wedding. That is, do not confide too much in the cheer you shall have at a feast or wedding, but provide for your self, lest it fall short, as they say it happened at D. García's wedding, who was a poor gentleman, and had invited many guests, the better sort had the dinner set before them, and the others were forced to take up with a second table, where bread being scarce, one wiser than the rest pull'd out a piece he had brought from home and said as above: And he says in the hood, because in former ages the men wore great hoods hanging behind to pull over their heads upon occasion, before hats were in use, and made use of them as a pocket.

Prov. Bóda buena bóda mala, el martes en tu casa: Whether the wedding be a good one or a bad one, be at home, or you must be at home on Tuesday. It was once usual in Spain, especially among the ordinary sort, to be married upon Saturday, and then they treated their guests that day, Sunday, and Monday. So the proverb says, you must be at home on Tuesday, because be the wedding never so splendid, the feasting is then done; or else because it is time to retire, to look to your business.

Prov. Bóda de negros: A wedding of blacks. That is, all noise and confusion. Because those poor people at their weddings have not the order and decency that is observed among gentry; but all talk, sing, and dance without any method.

Prov. De bóbas y bóbas se hinchen las bódas: Weddings are fill'd up with men and women fools. It is a sufficient sign of folly to be always haunting weddings and such publick meetings, to which fools resort either to eat and drink, or to shew their fine cloaths, or because they know not how to spend their time better.

Prov. De tales bódas tales tortas: Of such weddings such cakes. That is, from such company you must expect such actions; or, such a course of life must come to such an end; or, such causes will produce such effects. You can expect no more from a cat but her skin. They say, the occasion of the proverb was a gentleman's marrying a lady that was not so chaste as Lucretia, and at his wedding some wag brought in cakes stuck with Cornupia's, and some asking what that meant, another answer'd, such a wedding, such cakes; alluding to the horns that threaten'd the gentleman.

Prov. Esse es de bóda, que duerme con la novia: He has most share in the wedding who lies with the bride. That is, he is the principal guest, he has most interest in the wedding, for he has all the enjoyment of the feast and bride at another's expence.

Prov. La bóda de los pobres toda es voces: Poor peoples weddings are all noise. Because as was said above in the blacks wedding, the poor have not that order and decency as the rich, and all their pleasure is noise and confusion.

Prov. La mas hermosa de todas como la otra haze bódas: The beautifullest of them all makes a wedding like another. This is a check to the pride of those women who are conceited of their beauty, to give them to understand, that that the best they can expect is but to be marry'd, and used as other women are, to breed children, bring them forth with pain, and perhaps be no more valued.

Prov. La que no báyla de la boda se salga: Let her that does not dance turn out of the wedding. When you are at Rome you must do as they do at Rome. In company no one must be singular, but do as the company does, or else leave it, lest they be look'd upon as spies on the actions of others.

Prov. Lo que no se haze a la boda, no se haze a toda hora: What is not done at the wedding, is not done at any indifferent time. That is, if people do not perform at the proper seasons, as making a feast at the wedding, or the like, it is in vain to expect it of them at another time. Applicable to those that refuse to do things in season, and seek delays, promising from day to day what ought to be perform'd out of hand.

Prov. Ni boda sin canto, ni mortuorio sin llanto: There is no wedding without singing, nor no burial without weeping. This is natural, since every body endeavours to rejoice at weddings, and at funerals many weep, tho' it be but for fashion.

Prov. No ay boda sin tornaboda: There is no wedding without a second wedding feast. It is the Spanish custom, after the bridegroom has celebrated the festival of his nuptials as long as he thinks fit, for the wife's father to treat all the company splendidly; and this they call tornaboda, that is, the repetition of the wedding. Or if this fails, the bridegroom performs it himself, which is the reason they say, 'There is no wedding without the repetition of the wedding, because it is look'd upon as an indispensable duty.'

Prov. No se haze la boda de hongos, sino es de buenos ducados redondos: The wedding is not made of mushrooms, but of good round ducats. That is, it is not a slight matter like mushrooms, that will defray the expence of a wedding, but it requires good round ducats, a round expence, and not by halves. Applicable to any that think to do great matters with a small charge.

Prov. La flaca báyla en la boda, que no la gorda: The lean one dances at the wedding, and not the fat one. This proverb is by way of advice to unwildy women, that they do not covet to go to places where there must be dancing, because they will be shamed by young tender girls, who are fit for that sport. In general it directs all persons to apply themselves to that they are fit for, and not to aim at what they can never perform.

Prov. Qual boda sin Doña Toda? What wedding is there without Doña Toda? This is a reproof to all those that thrust themselves into every company, and take care to miss no merry bout, as they say this Doña Toda did, from whom the proverb took its rise.

Prov. Quien se ensaña en la boda, pícnlela toda: He that takes pet at a wedding loses it all. If a man grows passionate and pettish, he either goes away, and so has no share of the merry-making, or, if he stays, is so discomposed, that it little affects him. To instruct us not to be easily provoked, or grow angry in company that is met to be jovial and merry.

Prov. Quien bien báyla, de boda en boda se anda: He that is a good dancer goes from one wedding to another. Whoever has any particular grace, as dancing, singing, good conversation, or the like, is always acceptable in such merry meetings, and therefore is commonly invited, or, if not, easily intrudes.

Prov. Si desta escápo. y no muero, nunca mas bodas al cielo: If I escape this, and do not die, I'll never go see more weddings in heaven. This is a fable, that the fox seeing the eagle very weary, asked where she had been, who answer'd that at a wedding in heaven. The fox desir'd her the next wedding there was in heaven to carry her thither, which was what the eagle desired, and accordingly came and took up the fox, who from a great height she let fall. The fox, as she was tumbling, cry'd out, If I escape this bout, and am not kill'd, I'll ne'er go to more weddings in heaven. Applied to those who having run themselves into some great danger, take warning by it, and promise if they escape, never to run such hazards again.

Prov. A la boda del herrero cada qual con su dinero: Every one goes with his own money to the blacksmith's wedding. This is in country towns, where there is but one smith, and therefore all the people court him, so they go to his wedding, and every one carries something to present him. Every one is free to present where there is a prospect of interest.

Prov. Quando fuéres a la boda pon tu olla: When you go to a wedding hang on your own pot. That is, provide meat at home, tho' you go to a feast, for fear of what may happen. See more of this above, under the proverb A la boda de Don García, &c.

Prov. En la boda quien menos come es la novia: At the wedding it is the bride that eats least. Because when all others are merry and free, modesty restrains her.

BODEGA, a cellar for wine. In a ship the hold, or howl'd, which is all the empty space below the first or lower deck, where provisions and stores, or goods are stow'd.

ÇARÇAPARILLA, farsaparilla, a plant growing in New Spain, whose roots run above a yard under ground, of a murrey colour. It is not known to bear any fruit or blossom. The fresher it is the better, and it is known to be new, being then tough and bowing every way when you would break it, whereas that which is old breaks easily, and appears dusty and worm-eaten. It is of excellent use in physick, in infusion, made into a sirup, or in powder, and is good against many distempers, and particularly rheumes, fluxions, wind, fits of the mother, or any other disease, except fevers, or other violent distempers. The water is too hot for those that are themselves of a hot constitution, especially if they have a hot liver. But it is excellent for cold stomachs, and expels wind. It cures many inveterate diseases proceeding from ill humours. It is hot and dry almost in the second degree. The time for using the water of it is in the summer, or autumn, and the weather had better be hot than cold. Monardes, fol. 18 and 88.

ÇARÇA perrina, dog brier, eglantine; also a caper bush.

CARCAPULO, a large tall tree in India, bearing a sort of fruit like an orange without the peel, all scor'd like it, but not divided. It is cover'd with a thin smooth shining rind, not very dry, of a pale colour, and turns to a gold colour when ripe. The taste is very harsh, with a pleasant biting. This fruit is eaten with meat, and the Indians use it much in physick, being of known virtue to stop all fluxes and venereal runnings. It recovers the lost appetite, is good for several distempers in the eyes, and the midwives give it to bring away the after-birth, and increase the milk in women, as also to help women in labour. It is carry'd from Malabar to other parts. Christ. Acost. Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

Prov. En casa del mezquino, mas manda la muger que el marido: In the poor-spirited man's house, the wife rules more than the husband. This is obvious enough.

Prov. En casa de tu enemigo, la muger ten por amigo: In your enemy's house make the woman your friend. This is not very Christian advice, either to have an enemy, or to set his wife against him. But according to the world it seems politic to debauch an enemy's wife, and make a friend of her against him.

Prov. En casa del ruso la muger es alguazil: In the baste man's house the wife is alguazil. That is, she rules. It is the same with that above, En casa del mezquino, &c.

Prov. Huela la casa a hombre, y el andáva rodando: Let the house smell of a man, and he was tumbled about. That is, the husband says, Let the world know here is a man to rule this house, and at the same time he was kick'd about it. This was a husband, who having been well beaten by his wife, when the neighbours came in to part them, cry'd out manfully, So, so, let the house smell of man; as if he had done great feats, and thence it became a proverb. So we tell of one, who being beaten under the table by his wife, peep'd out and said, You shall never make me give over my manly looks. It is applicable to all boisterous bullics, who talk big, and take a beating.

Prov. Ni por casa, ni por viña, no tomes muger ximía, o mezquina: Do not take a monkeyish, that is, a very deformed, nor a mean-spirited wife, for the sake of either house or vineyard. That is, do not for a great portion marry a very deformed or very ill-temper'd woman.

Prov. Por casa, ni viña, no tomes muger parida: Do not take a wife that has had a child, for the sake of house or vineyard. This is only advice not to marry any but a maid, tho' she be rich.

Prov. Toma casa con kogár, y muger que sepa hilár: Take a house that has a fire-place, and a wife that can spin. That is, take a house that has all conveniences, and a wife that can work, and not ramble or be idle all day.

Prov. Triste es la casa donde la gallina canta, y el gallo calla: 'Tis a sad house, where the hen crows, and the cock is silent. That is, where the wife rules, and the husband obeys.

Prov. Tal queda la casa de la dueña, jdo el escudero, como el fuego sin trapobugero: When the husband is gone, the widow's house is left like the fire without a baek. That is, desolate and going to decay.

Prov. A casa de tu hermano no yrás cada serano: You must not go every evening to your brother's house. That is, be not too troublesome tho' it be to your own brother, and especially to go in the evening, when he must invite you to supper, for a constant guest is never welcome.

Prov. A casa de tu tia, mas no cada día: Go to your aunt's house, but not every day. It is the same as the last above it.

Prov. Hécho en casa, como cernadéro: Home spun, like coarse cloth. This they say of an ignorant, dull, clownish fellow.

Prov. 'I da y venida por casa de mi tia: Going and coming to my aunt's house. A proverb taken from a child, who as he went and came from school still call'd at his aunt's, because she gave him something, till the boys jeer'd him in these words. It is apply'd to those who cannot pass by a door without calling in, especially if there is any thing to be had; for where there is not, none call.

Prov. De fuera vendra, quien de casa nos echara: He'll come from abroad that will turn us out of doors. This we see practis'd, and therefore it needs no explaining.

Prov. En casa del Moro no hables Al-garavia: Do not speak Arabick in the Moor's house. That is, do not pretend to speak a language before those that that are masters of it, lest instead of getting credit you expose your ignorance.

Prov. En casa do siémpre comen póllos, mal comerán los póllos: In the house where they always eat chickens, the servants must be but ill fed. Because it is suppos'd the servants can never have a belly full of such tender costly fare.

Prov. En casa del oficial assoma la hambre, mas no ossa entrár: Hunger peeps into the handicrafts-man's house, but dare not enter. That is, handicrafts-men have never much to spare, so that hunger looks upon them, but never dares enter, because they have still enough to satisfy nature.

Prov. En casa del tabirr poco dura el alegría: Joy lasts but little in the gamelter's house. Because if he happens once to have good luck and rejoice his family, the next day he loses all again, and so overthrows that joy.

Prov. En casa llena presto se guisa la cena: In a full house the supper is soon dress'd. It is plain enough, that where there is plenty, a meal is soon got ready.

Prov. En tu casa no tienes sardina, y en la agéna pides gallina: you have not a pilchard in your own house, and ask for fowl in another's. Against those who starve at home, and are very dainty abroad.

Prov. De casa de ruyn nunca buen aguinádo: Never a good new-year's gift comes out of a base man's house. We must expect nothing that is good from a base person. We cannot make a silk purse of a sow's ear.

Prov. De buena casa buena brasa: From a good house a good coal. The opposite of the last foregoing proverb. From good people we may expect good things.

Prov. Después que la casa está hecha la dexa: When the house is finish'd, leave it. Because a new house is damp and unwholesome.

Prov. Quién haze casa, o cuba mas gasta que cria: He that builds a house, or makes a wine-press, spends more than he thinks for. The charge of building and planting vineyards is never certain.

Prov. Si quieres hazer de la casa corral quitale el techo, y cáutalo becho: If you would make a court-yard of your house, that is, if you would have it fall, take off the roof, and the business is done. Because any building that is uncover'd soon runs to ruin.

Prov. Todo lo haré mas casa con dos puertas no la guardaré: I'll do any thing, but will not take upon me to guard a house that has two doors. Because whilst a man looks to the one, he can give no account of the other.

Prov. Rénde en casa, y compra en feria, si quieres salir de la feria: Sell at home and buy in the fair, if you design to get out of want. That is, to grow rich. Because in a shop by retail things are sold to the best advantage, and in fairs there are good pennyworths by wholesale.

Prov. La casa quemada acudís con el agua: When the house is burnt you bring water. We say, when the steed is stole, you shut the stable-door.

Prov. Quién su casa quema, espanta los ratones, y calientase a la leña: He that burns his house frights away the mice, and warms himself at the fire. Apply'd to those who are at great expences to very little purpose.

Prov. Quando en casa engorda la moça, y al cuerpo el bapo, y al rey la bolsa, con mal anda la casa: When the maid grows fat in the house, and the spleen grows in the body, and the king's purse swells, things go bad. By the maid's growing fat is meant her belly swelling, the growing of the spleen every body knows is bad, and the king's purse swelling implies heavy taxes, all which are displeasing.

Prov. Casa, viña, y pairo, hágalo otro: Let another make a house, vineyard, and colt for you. That is, do not you undertake to build a house, to plant a vineyard, or break a colt, but buy them all ready to your hand, as the proverb above advises, in case of the house and vineyard.

Prov. Casa hospedada, comida, y demostrada: A house full of guests is eaten up, and ill spoken of. The expence devours the owner, and it is ill spoken of, because much company breeds disorder.

Prov. Casa con dos puertas mala es de guardar: A house that has two doors is ill to be secur'd: Or, Casa con dos puertas no la guardan todas dueñas: A house that has two doors cannot be guarded by all old women. That is, there is much difficulty in securing all things, because whilst they look to one door, something may be done amiss at the other.

Prov. Casa con cotéa, ladrón la saltea: A house with a flat roof, or with a balcony, is set upon by thieves. Because they have on such places the better conveniency of breaking in without being seen from the street.

Prov. Casa sin tejado, mucho frío, y poco recado: A house unroof'd is very cold, and has little conveniency.

Prov. A quién baze casa, o se casa, la bolsa le queda rasa: He that builds a house or marries, remains with an empty purse. They look upon these as chargeable things.

Prov. Casas quantas quepas, viñas quantas bevas, tierras quantas veas, olivares, cérrros, y valles: Houses as much as will hold you, vine-yards as much as you can drink, lands as many as you can see, olive gardens on mountains and valleys. That is, never covet to have more house-room than just serves your family, because all beyond it is only trouble and expence; nor any more vineyards than will supply wine for your families expence; because the vineyards are expensive, and wine a ticklish commodity; for lands, that is arable, as much as ever you can see, and olive-gardens as much, tho' they be on hills or in dales, because their income is more certain.

Prov. Casa en cantón y viña en rincón: A corner house and a vineyard in a nook. The corner house is counted pleasantest, as most expos'd to view, and the vineyard in a nook stands warmest. They also say

Prov. Casa en canto y viña en pago: A corner house and a vineyard in a village. That is, near houses, that it may not lie out on a road far from people, where all that pass take what they will.

Prov. Casa cumplida, en la otra vida. A perfect house in the other life. That is, we are not to expect any thing perfect in this world, where the happiest still want something, and the most perfect things are not without fault, but true perfection will be found in heaven.

Prov. Quando en casa no está el gato, estiéndose el rato: When the cat is not at home, the mouse grows proud. We say, when the cat is away, the mice will play.

Prov. Cada uno en su casa, y dios en la de todos: Every one in his house, and God in all of them. We say, Every one for himself, and God for us all.

Prov. En tu casa cuézen habas y en la mía calderadas: In your house they boil beans, and in mine kettles fill. There is something to do in your house, but much more in mine. It is generally taken in an ill sense, as when there is much quarrelling in a house, or the like.

Prov. En casa del ahorcado no se ha de nombrar la soga: The halter is not to be nam'd in a house that a man has been hang'd out of. That is, we must be so far from reproaching any body with their misfortunes, that we must not name those things which may put them in mind of them.

Prov. En casa del tamborilero todos son dançarines: In the taborer's house they are all dancers. That is, the whole family is something like the head, for as the master tabors so they dance.

Prov. Pues que se quema la casa calientémonos todos: Since the house is a fire let us all warm our selves. That is, let us make the best of all misfortunes.

Prov. A jidos de mi casa, y que queréis con mi mujer, no ay que responder: There is no answer to get you out of my house, and what have you to do with my wife? There is no doubt but every one ought to be master of his own house, and of his wife, and therefore when he bids any man go out of his house, or not to have to do with his wife, the best way is to make no answer.

Prov. En casa del herrero peor apéro. The worst tools are in the smith's house: Or, En casa del herrero cuchillo mangorrero: In the smith's house a bad knife. Or as we express, none worse shod than the shoe-maker's wife.

Prov. No me bisque en mi casa, quien me puede hallar en la plaza: Let him not look for me at home, who can meet me in the market-place. Men who have much business abroad, do not love to be disturb'd at home, whither they go to take their rest, having offices or other proper places abroad for business.

Prov. En casa del pobre todos riñen, y todos tienen razón: In the poor man's house all quarrel, and all are in the right. Because there are many wants, which put them out of humour, and that with good reason.

Prov. Casa con dos puertas, quando mas cerradas, tienen por abiertas: When a house has two doors, tho' they are never so fast lock'd, you may make account they are wide open. That is, you can never be secure where there is a back-door, for whilst you watch one, you may be betray'd at the other. See two more proverbs to this effect above.

Prov. Antes de casar, ten casas en que morar, y tierras en que labrar, y viñas que podar. Before you marry get a house to live in, lands to till, and a vineyard to prune. That is, do not marry till you have wherewith to maintain your family.

Prov. Casa de padre, vino de aguelo, olivar de reusagueo: A father's house, a grand-father's vineyard, and a great grandfather's olive-garden. That is, these are best, viz. a house built by one's father, which is season'd and not decay'd, a vineyard by one's grand-father, because it is best of some standing, and the olive-garden requires much time to grow up to perfection.

Prov. Con mal anda la casa, donde la ruca manda al espada: That house is in bad plight, where the distaff commands the sword. Where the woman wears the breeches.

CASA'CA, a coat or upper garment.

CASA'DA, a marry'd woman, a wife.

CASADE'RO, marriageable, of age to marry.

CASA'DO, marry'd; also a marry'd man, a husband.

Prov. A la mal casada miradle a la cara. Look upon the face of a wife that has an ill husband. This is in general; look upon a woman, and by her face you may discover whether she has a good husband.

Prov. Quien ama la casada la vida trae empreñada: He who loves a marry'd woman has his life but upon courtesy. That is, till the husband discovers the intregue and kills him.

Prov. Bien, o mal casado me han: Well or ill, I am marry'd. That is, when a thing is past there is no looking back.

CASAMA'TA, a cazematte, which is a platform in that part of the flank of the bastion next the curtain, somewhat retir'd and drawn back towards the capital of the bastion, on which guns are planted, loaded with small shot to scour along the ditch, and cover'd from the enemies works with earth-works, call'd orillon's, or epaulments.

CASAMENTE'RO, a match-maker.

CASAMIENTO, a wedding.

Prov. No ay casamiento pobre, ni mortuorio rico: There is no poor wedding, nor rich burial. That is, always new marry'd people are said to have great portions and estates, and widows also pretend they are left poor.

Prov. Casamiento, y badas malas preso son llegadas: Marriage and ill luck are not long a coming. Said by those that love a loose life.

Prov. Casamiento hagas que a pleyto andes: May you marry so that you may have law-suits. That is, rather a curse than proverb, as wishing a man may be at variance with his wife's kindred, who ought to be his friends.

Prov. Destos casamientos que mariparda haze a unos pesa, y a otros place: Some are pleas'd and some displeas'd at these matches Mariparda makes. That is, whoever meddles in such affairs can never please all people.

CASAMURO, a single wall without any other works.

CASANE'RO, one of the house.

CASA'R, to marry, to wed. Hebrew casar, to bind.

Prov. Antes que te cases, mira lo que haces, que no es nido que asi desates: Before you marry take heed what you do, for it is no knot that can be easily unt'y'd. That is very plain advice to be cautious in the affair of matrimony, because it is indissoluble. It may be apply'd in other cases, as we say, look before you leap.

Prov. Casar, casar, y quien ha de governar: Marry, marry, and who must rule the house. A reproof to young people that would marry before they have sense to govern a family. It is said upon any occasion, when people would undertake what they are not capable of.

Prov. Casar, y compadrar, cada qual con su igual: Let every one marry and make a gossip of his equal. A general advice to endeavour in all things to have to do with our equals, especially in matrimony, because inequality of birth or fortune is often the cause of discord.

Prov. Casate veras, perderas sueño nunca dormirás: Marry and you'll see what will come of it, you'll lose your sleep, and never close your eyes. A proverb to express the care that matrimony brings upon a man.

Prov. Casaras, y amansaras: You'll marry and grow tame. It is a common saying in English, if you will tame any one marry him.

Prov. Casar ruynes, y nacerán montaraces: Marry a base couple you'll have a wild breed. It is a general opinion that the children take after the parents, and sometimes it may be, but daily experience shows the contrary. In beasts indeed the main thing is the breed, but in man I think education is the principal.

Prov. De cedo casar, y cedo madurar, arrepentite has, mas no mucho mal: You'll repent marrying early, and rising very early, but there is no great great harm in either.

Prov. Para mal casar, mas vale minca maridar: Better never be a husband, or have a husband, than ill marry'd.

Prov. Quién léxos se va a casar, o va engañado, o va a engañar: He that goes a great way to marry is either cheated or goes to cheat. We find this too often verify'd, for things at a great distance are seldom truly represented.

Prov. Quién tarde casa, mal casa: He that marries late, marries ill. Because they ought to marry young to have children, and to be us'd to one another's temper, for old people when they first come together cannot bear with one another's failings; and the scripture says, Bonum est viro cum portaverit jugum ab adolescentia sua.

Prov. Quién mal casa, tarde embiuda: It is long before he becomes a widower, who marries ill. That is, when people are ill marry'd they always think it long before the widowhood comes.

Prov. Si quieres bien casar, casa con tu yguál: If you would be well marry'd, marry your equal. This we have above under the words, casar y compadrar, cada qual con su yguál.

Prov. Casar, casar suena bien, y sabe mal: Marry, marry, sounds well, and relishes but ill. That is, people talk of marrying with a great deal of pleasure, but afterwards meet with cares and troubles that give it an ill relish.

Prov. La que con muchos se casa, a todos enfada: She that is marry'd to many tires them all. In the literal sense, a woman that marries many husbands, is suppos'd to weary them out of their lives with her ill temper. But otherwise by casar con muchos, to marry many, is only meant an impertinent woman, that has an oar in every man's boat, and has business with every body, which vexes and tries all the world.

CASA'R, Subst. A farm-house; a village.

CASA'RSE, vid. Casar.

Clavo de ojo, a spot in the white of the eye.

Clavo de levilla, the tongue of a buckle.

Clavo de girose, or gerofse, vid. Clávo de especia.

Clavo de especia, clove. The tree is like a bay-tree, with a very thick head, and the leaf smaller, neither very thick nor thin. This tree bears abundance of blossoms, which all turn into cloves. The flower is first white, then green, when it has the shape of the clove, and soon grows hard and turns ruflet, and when gather'd and dry'd, black. It grows upon the very boughs of the tree, and fewest of them at the foot of the leaves; one, two, three or four grow out of one stalk. When the trees are loaded, they smell fragrant at a distance. All the cloves brought into Europe come from the Molucco Islands. The trees are wild, and never planted nor grafted. The clove is gather'd from September till February, and that which is not gather'd one year grows bigger against the next. When gather'd it is dry'd for some days in the sun. The green cloves are preserv'd, and others laid in pickle to eat. These trees the islanders say are eight years growing, and last an hundred. The clove in Latin is called cariophyllus; in Arabick, Persian and Turkish, coransul; in Molucco, chianche; in Spanish, as above; in Portuguese, cravos; in French, clou de girofle; in High Dutch, Negelin. The clove and the nutmeg-trees are nothing alike, as some people have conceited, and the reader may see under the word nuez moscada, or nutmeg. Acost. Nat. Hist. Ind. where the curious may see more of it.

Clavo de berradira a punta de diamante, a frost-nail for a horse-shoe.

Dar en el clavo, to hit the nail on the head.

Echar clavo, to clap a nail into one, that is, to over-reach or cheat him. Taken from a smith's nailing a good horse he sees a traveller ride on, to oblige him to change with somebody he employs for a worse.

No vale un clavo, it is not worth a nail; we say a straw or a pin.

Echar a una persona una S, y un clavo, to burn a man with an S and the shape of a nail on the face, which is the mark of a slave. Met. it is to lay such obligations upon a man, as shall bind him to one for ever.

Un clavo saca otro, one nail drives out another.

Prov. Una en el clavo, y ciento en la berradira: One stroke on the nail and an hundred on the horse-shoe. The smiths when they are shoeing, often strike on the shoe, as it were to keep their hand in use; but this is not the meaning of the proverb, which signifies to talk much and but little to the purpose.

Prov. Echar un clavo a la rueda de la fortuna: To clap a nail into fortune's wheel; that is, to fasten it, to secure one's self so as to be out of the reach of fortune.

CLAUQUILLADOR, an officer so called in the kingdom of Aragon, to search and to receive the duties of all goods.

CLAUQUILLAR, a word us'd throughout the dominions of the crown of Aragon, signifying a seal or mark the king's officers put upon any parcel of goods to show it has been search'd, that no other officer need search it again. From the Lat. claudo, to shut.

C O C

CÓCA, is a small green leaf growing on little trees or bushes about a man's height, in excessive hot and very moist land. The tree bears this leaf every four months. It requires much care in cultivating, and much more to preserve it when gather'd. They lay it very orderly into long narrow baskets, which they load on the sheep of the country, and they travel with this commodity in flocks carrying two or three thousand baskets. It generally grows in the country they call Los Andes, in bottoms which are intollerable hot, where it rains most part of the year; and it costs the Indians intollerable labour and many lives to look after it, because they go for it from the cold mountains. The use of it is only to chew and suck the juice of it, but not swallow the leaf. It doubtless is nourishing, for the Indians will travel great journeys, or do any other great labour without eating, with only an handful of coca. It has an unpleasant taste, and they powder it with ashes or lime. F. Jos. Acost. Nat. Hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. chap. 22. p. 252.

Coca, children in Spain call the head by this name. And it was so in Old Spanish.

CÓCA, a town in the kingdom of Old Castile in Spain, eight leagues from Segovia, seated at the confluence of the rivers Eresma and Valtaya, antiently wall'd, the country most fruitful, the inhabitants 300 families, two parishes, one monastery of friars, and one hospital. CÓCO, a market-place.

Cóco, vid. Cóffo.

Cóco, a worm that eats the vines, or other trees; or any such sort of worm or insect. Also the word us'd to fright children, as we say the bull-beggar.

COCO, o palma de las Indias, the coconut-tree, otherwise call'd the Indian palm-tree, because like the palm, being tall, hard, and putting out greater branches the higher they rise. The fruit call'd also cocos, or coco-nuts by us, have a shell whereof they make drinking cups. The kernel tastes somewhat like a new almond, but when hanging on the tree all within is water, which they drink as a great dainty, and to cool them in hot weather. They say the tree puts out a new cluster of coco-nuts every month, so that it produces twelve times in a year. They are commonly as big as a small muskmelon. There is another sort they call coquillos, or little coco-nuts, which is a better sort of fruit, and grows in the kingdom of Chile; they are somewhat less than walnuts, but rounder. There is yet another sort, which does not give one single kernel, but a great many little ones like almonds, which are in it like the seeds in a pomgranate. These almonds are three times as big as those of Castile, and taste like them, but are a little harder; they are also juicy and oily. They are pleasant to eat, and for want of the others serve to make marchpans, and such like dainties. They call them almonds of the Andes, because abundance of them grow in the Andes of Peru, and they are so hard, that they require a great stroke with a stone to break them. F. Jof. Acost. Nat. Hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. chap. 26. p. 259. In the Maldivy islands they build, rig, and fit out ships from this tree alone, which furnishes all the timber, masts, yards, sails, and rigging; and when fit to sail, they load her with commodities from the same tree, as oil, wine, vinegar, black sugar, fruit, and strong water. With this tree alone they build good houses, and cover them with the leaves. The body of the tree affords timber for building, of the leaves they make sails, of the outward shell of the nut all the cordage and rigging. The wine is made by cutting a branch of the tree, and putting a vessel under, into which that liquor distils, and is call'd Sura. This several times distill'd becomes a strong water, whereof there are two sorts, the best call'd fula, and the second sort arach, or, as we call it, rack. The same sura set in the sun becomes vinegar. After the first running of the sura from the tree, they receive the last running in another vessel, which boil'd, becomes sugar, call'd there jagra. The inward hard shell serves to make cups and dishes, and is also us'd for firing by curious goldsmiths in those parts. Of the nut enough has been said, but in the East Indies they dry it, and so keep it all the year, carrying it to several parts. Of this dry'd kernel they also make very good oil, and another sort of it green. Acosta Nat. Hist. of the East Indies.

COCOBRA, trouble, affliction, crossness of fortune: But most properly, and from thence apply'd to signify as above, it is the wind, when it blows right a-head, which makes the men that row in a galley labour hard, and she bears as if she went upon stones. It is also a dangerous cast at dice, which puts him that throws it into a fear, as when seven is the main, and he casts four for his chance.

Under the Moors it gave name to one of their kingdoms, and that for many years was the greatest in Spain. It was famous in the Roman time, and call'd Corduba. Its cathedral is a prodigious structure, and has 365 columns or pillars of black marble, and 24 doors. It is a bishoprick and university, and seated in about 30 deg. of north lat. It is most pleasantly situated in a delicious fruitful valley, at the foot of the mountain Sierra Morena. Besides the abundant product of the earth, much silk is here made and wrought; and there were formerly silver mines about it, now neglected for those of the West Indies. But above all it is famous for its noble breed of horses, to which purpose the king there keeps 500 mares. The city is wall'd, the buildings magnificent, its castle or palace majestic. Its inhabitants are 14000 families, with 13 parishes, 15 monasteries of men, the same number of nuns, and 12 hospitals. This bishoprick is worth to its prelate 40000 ducats a year. Cordova is also the surname of a noble family in Spain.

CORNIZO'LAS, haws, or hawberries.

CORNUCOPIA; the Cornucopia is an emblem of plenty, which poets feign Hercules took from Achelous, being a horn filled by the fates with plenty of all things. Poetical writers often use this word.

CORNUDA'NO, cuckolded.

CORNUDADO'R, a cuckold-maker.

CORNUDA'R, to be made, or to make a cuckold.

CORNUDERIA, cuckoldom.

CORNÚDO, horned, a cuckold; also a sort of fish.

Prov. Cornido soy marido; muger, y quin te lo dixo? Husband, you are a cuckold; Wife, who told you so. A common saying, when a man will not take notice of his own shame, or endeavours to turn off affronts slightly, as here, the wife calls her husband cuckold, and he, as if he did not know it, asks who told her so.

Prov. Cornido y apaleado, mandadle baylar: When a man is cuckolded and beaten, bid him dance. This they say, when a man is much wrong'd, and yet they make him pay costs, or when after abusing a man they would have him be merry. The story is of one who catching his wife with a great man, was beaten by him, and then they made friends, and the company danc'd, bidding the husband dance with them, who answers with this proverb. As if it were not enough that a man should be cuckolded and beaten, but he must dance too.

Prov. Mas vale ser cornido, que no lo sepa ninguno; que sin serlo, pensarlo todo el mundo: It is better to be a cuckold, so no body knows it, than not to be so, and have all the world believe it. Because the shame is in the opinion of the world; for whatever disgrace is not known, never puts a man out of countenance.

Prov. Mucho sabia el cornido, pero mas quien se los puso: The cuckold was very cunning, but he was cunninger that cuckolded him. This is applicable to any man that has a great conceit of himself, but is outwitted or overreach'd by another. For he that cuckolds another must use art to deceive him.

Prov. Per esso es uno cornido, porque pueden mas dos que uno: Therefore a man is a cuckold, because two are too hard for one. The wife and the gallant contrive to abuse the husband, and being two they have the advantage of him. This is applied in all other cases, where, as we say, two to one is odds; or, two heads are better than one.

Prov. Quien es cornido y lo consiente, que sea cornido para siempre: He that is a cuckold and allows of it, may he be a cuckold for ever. If a man knows his shame, and does not resent or endeavour to amend it, no body ought to pity him, but to wish it may attend him for ever.

Prov. Quien es cornido, y calla, en el corazón trae un asua: He who is a cuckold and says nothing, carries a burning coal in his heart. When a man stifles his resentment and endeavours to conceal his disgrace, it corrodes his heart and consumes him, like a burning coal upon his heart.

Prov. Tras cornido sañado: Angry or morose after being made a cuckold. That is, when a man after being cuckolded shows himself dogged and surly, yet has not the courage to punish the offenders, but only shows his resentment in his looks.

Prov. El mal del cornido, el no lo sabe, y sabelo todo el mundo: All the world knows the cuckold's misfortune, but he knows it not himself. This is a common saying, when men are kept ignorant of their own misfortunes, which are publicly known abroad, as is usual in this particular case, for very often a man knows nothing of his being a cuckold, tho' it be whisper'd about all the country, because no body cares to tell him. This same is said shorter, thus,

Prov. El postrero que lo sabe es el cornido: The cuckold is the last that knows it, as above.

CORNUPE'TA, a mischievous mad bull, a Latin word used in Spanish.

CÚBA, a great island in the bay of Mexico, south of Florida, the greatest in those parts, near 300 leagues in length, and 35 in breadth. West of Hispaniola, and east of the continent of America, and north of Jamaica. Subject to the Spaniards, well planted, and very rich, producing sugar, tobacco, indigo, and other commodities. There are in it six cities, the chief of them Santiago on the south side, and Havana on the north; which last is a great sea-port, well fortify'd, where the ships of all those parts do rendezvous, to return to Spain. It lies but a little south of the tropick of Cancer.

Prov. La cuba llena la suegra bedda: The wine-vat full, and the mother-in-law a drunkard. This comes from a poor man, whose whole vintage would yield but one vat of wine, upon which he built all his hopes, but his wife's mother loving wine, drank so fast that she disappointed him. It is therefore apply'd to those who meet with some unexpected disappointments when they thought themselves provided for.

Prov. Cada cuba huele al vino que tiene: Every vat smells of the wine it holds. Every man's behaviour will show his disposition or education.

a broody hen, because she sits so over her eggs, for fear of breaking them.

CUCLILLO, a cuckow.

Prov. Por vos canto el cuclillo: The cuckow sung for you. This is said when two differing about any thing, a third makes his advantage of it. The ground of it is, that two jealous husbands walking abroad heard the cuckow sing, and each said it was for the other. They appointed a third to decide the controversy, and each made the umpire a present to bribe him to say the bird sang for the other. He reprovd them both for their folly, and said the cuckow's singing was a good omen, and that he had sung for him, since he had got both their presents. Therefore when a third man runs away with the profit, they say, the cuckow sang for him.

Cúco, a black. Also the bird call'd a cuckow; also a drunkard.

Prov. El buen día metérle en casa: Take hold of a good day. That is, make hay while the sun shines.

Prov. Buenos días, Péro días, mas quisiéra mis blanquillas: Good morrow Peter Diaz. He answers, I had rather have my little money. That is, fair words pay no debt.

Prov. Cada día olla, &c. vid. Olla.

Prov. Casár y mal día todo en un día: To marry and have an ill day of it. That is, to have joy turn'd into sorrow. Tho' others will have it that the wedding-day is always a bad day.

Prov. El día que te casás, o te sanas o te mátas: the day you marry you either cure or kill your self. That is, according as it proves you either make your life happy or miserable.

Prov. Si quieres un día bueno, házte la barba; un mes bueno, máta un puér-co; un año bueno cástate; un siempre bueno házte clérigo: If you would have a good day trim your self; if a good month kill a hog; if a good year marry; if a good ever turn clergyman. When a man is trim'd he is clean and easy, which makes a good day; a hog has a great deal of variety in him, which affords good eating for a month; the first year of matrimony is pleafantest, before children and other troubles come on; the clergyman having none to take care of but himself and his soul, is always easy and lives well.

Prov. A cada malo su día malo: Every wicked one has his wicked day. Or, every dog has his day.

Prov. Al día bueno ábrele la puerta, y para el malo te apareja: Open the door to a good day and prepare for the bad. That is, embrace and make your advantage of a favourable opportunity, and provide to receive ill fortune when it comes, that you may not be surprized.

Prov. Al quinto día verás que mes aurás: The fifth day you will see what month you will have. That is, such as the fifth day of the moon proves you may expect the rest of the month. From the Latin quarta quinta qualis, cætera luna talis.

Prov. Désde que nací loré, y cada día náce porque: As soon as I was born I wept, and every day produces cause to weep. To express the unhappiness of this life.

Prov. Día de núblo la mañana larga, el día ninguno: A cloudy day is a long morning and no day. That is, when the sky is clouded it looks like a long break of day and no day, because in Spain they are so us'd to see the sun, that they count it no day when the sun does not shine out.

Prov. En buen día buenas obras: The better the day the better the deed.

Prov. Trás los días viene el frío: Sense comes with age.

Prov. Un día frío, y otro caliente, háze al hombre doliente: A cold day and then a hot day makes a man sick. Uncertain weather is unwholsom.

Prov. Dios me de marido, rico, si quier sea borracho: God give me a rich husband, tho' he be an ass. This is a woman's wish, who cares not what her husband is, provided he have but wealth to keep her well.

Prov. Dios de te ovejas, y hijos para con ellas: God give you sheep, and sons with them. A friendly prayer to wish a man cattle, and that his own children may look to it, that shepherds may not cheat him. The same may be understood of any other worldly goods.

Prov. Dios te de padre y madre en villa, y en tus trojes trigo y harina: God give you a father and mother in a town, and corn and meal in your granaries. By a father and mother in town is meant, that they may live in a rich place, where they may be likely to thrive, and provide for the son; but in case they should not, he wishes granaries full of corn, that the son may not stand in need of them.

Prov. Dios te salve, Mendo. No a mi, que estoy comiendo: God save you, Mendo. Not me, for I am at dinner. An atheistical proverb, supposed to come from the mouth of a brutal man, who, having got what he wants, forgets God; and therefore when they say to him God save you, which he looks upon as too familiar an expression, he answers, Not me, for I am at dinner; reckoning himself above that familiar salutation, tho' attended by so good a prayer.

Prov. Dios te guarde de piedra, y dardo, y de hombre denodado: God preserve you from a stone and dart, and from a furious man. This is a general prayer to deliver us from all dangers, and especially such as are unforeseen, as a stone or dart, which reach at a distance, and a furious man, who does any mischief before he gives warning.

Prov. Dios me depare meson, que la buespeda me haga algo, y el buespedero: God send me to an inn where the hostess may be some kin to me, and not the host. The same is otherwise express'd: Alli me lleve dios a esse meson, do sea de la buespeda, y del buespedero: God carry me to that inn that belongs to the hostess, and not to the host. Both tend to the same, which is, that a man may be entertain'd by the hostess, who is commonly kinder and neater than the host.

Prov. Dios te de salud y gozo, y casa con corral y pozo: God give you health and joy, and an house with a court and well. This proverb is a good prayer, wishing a man all happiness, signify'd by health, and joy, and the conveniencies of life, denoted by a court-yard, which is an addition to a house, and makes it pleasant; and a well, to have water plenty for all uses.

Prov. Dios te guarde de párrafo de legista, y de infra de canonista, y de etc. de scrivano, y de recipe de medico: God keep you from the paragraph of a civilian, the infra of a canonist, the etc. of a notary or scrivener, and a physician's recipe or bill. This proverb is a good prayer for God to deliver a man from falling into the hands of lawyers of any sorts, and of scriveners or physicians.

Prov. Dios te de bienes, y casa en que los echas: God give you goods, and an house to put them into. This is still a good prayer made proverbial.

Prov. Dios te de poder en villa, y en tu casa harina: God give you power in a town, and meal in your house. That is, tho' you be in authority and command, may you have a substance of your own, which is signified by meal, that you may not altogether rely upon your employment, and perhaps be induced to ill practices, if it be not such as will keep you in plenty.

Prov. Dios me de contienda con quien me entienda: God grant I may have to do or contest with those that understand me. That is, God grant I may converse or contend, or have any dealings with men of sense and understanding, who are capable of reason, and not with dull brutes, who are incapable of reason.

Prov. Dios te de páscoa buena, y las ochavas en la cadena: God give you good holy days, and the octave in a goal. This is a reflection on those that will fare well, and spend much money upon holydays, tho' they run in debt, and be carried to prison as soon as they are over.

Prov. Dios dixo lo que será: God said what will be. That is, only God can tell what will be hereafter. To show the folly of those, who think by astrology, or even by sorcery, to dive into futurity; whereas there is nothing so certain, as that God alone knows what is to come.

Prov. Dios desavenga quien nos mantenga: God grant some may fall out, that they may maintain us. This is a prayer of lawyers, wishing for discord, that law-suits may ensue; and of surgeons, that people may fall out and wound one another, to make work for them.

Prov. Dios no come ni bebe, mas juzga lo que ve: God does neither eat nor drink, but he judges what he sees. A christian proverb, to put us in mind that God sees all things, and is an impartial and immortal judge of all our actions.

Prov. Dios constante, mas no siempre: God bears, but not always. To signify, fy, that tho' God is merciful, and bears a long time, yet his revenge or justice will come at last, and perhaps when we least expect it.

Prov. Diós kára mercéd. T'ain tres días sin comer: God will provide. And I shall fast three days longer. A proverb in two parts. The first shows, that he who wants for nothing, comforts one that is starving with the hopes that God will provide for him, without stretching out his own hand to relieve him; and the other, as in despair, answers, And I shall fast three days longer. That is, you see me starve, and will not relieve me, and you comfort me with that provision which may come after I am dead.

Prov. Diós pága a quién en malos päsos anda: God requites those that follow ill courses. It needs no explaining, for God's justice sooner or later overtakes all wicked men.

Prov. Diós nos de mucho pan y mala cosecha: God give us much corn, and a bad harvest. This is the prayer of wicked farmers, who would every one have a great deal of corn themselves, and a bad harvest for all the rest, that they might sell theirs dear, tho' others starve. This prayer is too frequent among us, where 'one of the greatest grievances is a plentiful harvest.

Prov. Diós no se quexa, mas lo suyo no dexa: God does not complain, but he quits not his own. That is, God, who is almighty, does not like man complain of the offences done him; but, tho' he is silent, he does not quit the right he has to punish, which he executes at his own time.

Prov. Diós es el que sana, y el médico lleva la plata: It is God that cures, and the physician has the money. All health is from God, but some men when they recover of a sickness give all the glory to the physician, without remembering God, or giving him thanks for preserving them.

Prov. Diós ayuda a los mal vestidos: God helps those that are ill clad. All the world is ready to serve and assist those that are well clad, that is, those who want for nothing, but the poor, the distressed, signified by those that are ill clad, have none but God to help them.

Prov. De diós el medio: Half of God. This is an expression of ill christians, who will serve God by halves, or take one half of his precepts, and so give the other half of their life to the devil. It is also a profane expression, to signify how great a thief a man is, by saying, He will steal half of God himself.

Prov. Diós y vida componen villa: God and life make up a town. That is, with the assistance of God and the help of living creatures, towns and cities are made.

Prov. Diós nos dió el rey de las ranas: God gave us the king of the frogs. This they say, when people could not be satisfy'd when they were well, and therefore run themselves into misfortunes. The fable of the frogs and their king is well known.

Prov. Diós te libre de ira de señor, y de alboroto de pueblo, y de juégo de espartaña: God deliver you from the anger of a great man, from a mutiny of the people, and the play or sport of a buskin made of esparto. The first two are obvious enough, and their danger well known, but the last only signifies the unlucky rearing of those buskins when a man travels with them, and so is left bare-foot. Covarrubias makes this last out better, and says it is, God deliver you from falling into contempt, and having the rabble throw old buskins, or old shoes at you.

Prov. Diós te libre de hombre de un libro: God deliver you from a man of one book. That is, that knows but one book; because he has read it often, and having it in his head, always tires and torments you with it.

Prov. A diós rogando, y con el mazo dando: Praying to God, and laying on with the beetle. That is, our prayers to God must be accompanied with our endeavours. We must not lie down in the ditch, and cry God help us.

Prov. A quién diós quiere bien la casa le sabe: God knows the houses of those he loves. That is, when God pleases to bestow his mercies, he soon finds out those persons he thinks fit to receive them, tho' never so obscure.

Prov. Crés en diós, y no en puta vieja como vos: I believe in God, and not in such an old whore as you. Plain enough, and needs no more exposition.

Prov. Mas vale a quién diós ayuda, que quién mucho madruga: He is better whom God helps, than he that rises early. That is, all our endeavours without God's blessing do not turn to account. According to the psalm, Nisi dominus adificaverit domum, &c.

Prov. Hagote porqué me kagas, que no eres diós que me valzas: I do you a good turn that you may do me another, for you are no God that can support me. That is, one good turn deserves another. God only is to be served for his own sake.

Prov. A diós te doy libreta, y bevida por bilar: God take you, pound (of flax) drank out and not spun. This is for those who spend the money before the work is done, and then curse the work, calling it working for a dead horse. The story is, that an old woman being pay'd beforehand for spinning a pound of flax, she drank out the money, and every time she went to spin cry'd out, God take you, but meant the devil take the pound of flax, because the price of spinning was spent before.

Prov. Allá me lleve diós a morir, do un huevo vale un real: God send me to live where an egg is worth a groat. That is, God grant I may live in a rich country; for where there is plenty of money all things are dear proportionably, and there the most money is to be got, and there is the best living.

Prov. Andá con diós, y con romadizo, la pierna quebrada, y el cuadril salido: God go with you, and a running cold, a broken leg, and the bone sticking out. A back prayer, but commonly spoke in jest.

Prov. A quién diós quiere bien en Sevilla le dió de comer: Him that God loves well, he gives him wherewith to live in Sevil. That is, they are beloved by God who can live in that city. This is a proverb made by the admirers of Sevil, as others say, Quén no ha visto a Sevilla, no ha visto maravilla: He that has not seen Sevil, has seen no wonder. And of Madrid, De Madrid al cielo: From Madrid to heaven. As if it were so fine a place, that a man ought to covet to see nothing after it.

Prov. A quién diós quiere bien la perra le pare lechónes. The man whom God loves, his bitch brings forth pigs. That is, where God's blessing is, all things turn to a man's advantage.

Prov. Buëno, buëno, buëno, mas guarda diós mi birra de su centeno: Good, good, good, but God keep my ass out of his rye. That is, such an one is a very good man every body says, because no body tries to touch him in the sensible part of his goods; therefore says the country-man, God keep my ass out of his rye; for if she gets in, and eats but a mouthful, as good as he is, he'll put her in the pound, and me to trouble.

Prov. A tuërto y a derecho ayude diós a nuestro consejo: Right or wrong, God help help our council. A saying of obstinate men of no conscience, who would have God prosper their undertakings, tho' never so unjust. This is said to such men, when they pray for success to ill designs.

Prov. Da dios alas a la kormiga, para que se pierda mas ayna: God gives the ant wings that the may perish the sooner. That is, God raises up base men, that they may have the greater fall. Talantur in altum, ut lapsu graviores ruant.

Prov. Da dios almendras a quien no tiene nuélas: God gives almonds to those that have no teeth. Also, Da dios habas a quien no tiene quixadas: God gives beans to those that have no jaws. They are two proverbs to the same effect, and signify, that God gives plenty and riches to those that have not the heart to do good with them.

Prov. De dios viene el bien, de las abejas miel: All good comes from God, and honey from the bees. This is a pious proverb, to put us in mind, that whatever blessings we receive, come from the hand of God.

Prov. De al me vengue dios, que del pastor agua y nieve: God give me revenge of others, for the snow and rain will revenge me upon the shepherd. These were the words of a gentleman, who, being wronged by his shepherd, was advised to punish him, and answer'd with this proverb, as thinking the hardships the poor shepherd endured were punishment enough for him. And this is a christian saying, to leave it to God to punish the rich that offend us, and for the poor to think their own sufferings are punishment enough.

Prov. De dios hablar, y del mundo obrar: To talk of God, and act worldly. This we see practised daily, and needs no explaining; it answers to a wolf in sheeps cloathing.

Prov. De lo feo a lo hermoso, déme dios lo provechoso: Of the beautiful or ugly God give me that which is profitable. That is, I value not beauty or deformity, but profit. As when a man refuses a beautiful poor wife for one that is ugly and rich.

Prov. De aquella me déxe dios comer, que dexa los pollos, y comienga a poner: God give me to eat of her that leaves the chickens, and begins to lay. This is only wishing for a pullet with eggs, that is, one that is past being reckon'd among chickens, and begins to be with egg.

Prov. Dize al doliente el sano, Dios te de salud hermano: He that is well says to the sick man, God give you health, brother. This proverb declares we are free enough of our good wishes, and therefore they use it when one refuses to give an alms, and only says to a poor man, God help you; for we are ready enough to give good wishes, but not to open our purses.

Prov. Eche dios agua que hecho está do caya: God send rain, for the place is made for it to fall on. So says the countryman when he has sow'd; and it is apply'd in all other cases where a man has disposed all things for success, and now only prays for God's blessing to his endeavours.

Prov. Esse lo haze lo que a dios plaze: That is done which pleases God. That is, we may be satisfy'd that what God ordains will be.

Prov. Fiár de dios sobre buena prenda: To trust in God upon good security. This the poor say the rich do, who put their trust in God, because they have good estates for their security.

Prov. Guárdete dios de hecho es: God keep you from it is done. That is, God deliver us from evils that are done and cannot be recall'd, because what is done cannot be undone.

Prov. Guárdete dios del diablo, de ojo de ramera, y buelta de dado: God defend you from the devil, the eye of an harlot, and the turn of a dye. This is a prayer for soul, body, and purse; the words are plain enough, and need no exposition.

Prov. Guárdado es lo que dios guarda: That is well kept which God keeps. Nothing is safe but what God secures, according to that of the psalmist, Nisi dominus custodierit civitatem, frustra vigilat qui custodit eam.

Prov. Hizonos dios y maravillámonos nos: God made us, and we admire at it. That is, we do not understand the great works of God, and yet we are proud and vain, and instead of praising him for his works, endeavour to pry into them, and dive into his secrets.

Prov. Lo que dios da llevarse ha: What God gives must be born. There is no opposing the will of God, and if he gives troubles, they must be born with patience. What can't be cur'd must be endur'd.

Prov. Mas puede dios ayudar, que velar, ni madrugar: God can help more than watching or rising early. The blessing of God is beyond all human endeavours.

Prov. Mas vale taque, taque, que dios os salve: Taque, taque, is better than God save you. Taque, taque, here signifies the noise of the hammer knocking at a street door, and the proverb means, it is better there should be knocking at your door, than that any body should come into your house unknown, till he says God save you.

Prov. Miente mas que da por dios: He lyes more than he gives for God's sake. This is to denote a great liar, or one that makes no conscience of what he says.

Prov. No te de dios mas mal, que muchos hijos y poco pan: God give you no greater curse than many children and little bread. This is misery enough, and so plain as not to want expounding.

Prov. No de dios a nuestros amigos tanto bien que nos desconoscan: May it please God not to make our friends so happy, as that they may not know us. This is too frequent in the world, and therefore the proverb is good, to pray they may not have so much as to forget themselves; as we daily see men puffed up with their fortunes, who then refuse to know their best friends.

Prov. No hizo dios a quien desamparar: God made none to forsake them. Tho' never so low or unfortunate, God's providence is over all, and he takes care of the least, as well as the greatest, if they confide in him.

Prov. No hiere Dios con dos manos, que a la mar hizo puertos, y a los ríos vados: God does not wound with both hands, for he made ports to the sea and fords to the rivers. That is, God does not send calamities without some comforts, he lays not on his strokes with both hands, that is, to sink us under them; but as there are ports to the raging sea, and fords in rapid rivers, so there are some means of comfort or relief in the greatest sorrows or distresses.

Prov. Pléga a Dios que nascá el peregril en el ascua: God grant the pirley may grow in the fire. This they say when they wish some good may be made of some great misfortune.

Prov. Quando Dios quiere con todos vientos llueve: When God pleases it rains with all winds. That is, when God pleases any the most unlikely things turn to our advantage.

Prov. Quando no tenía davate, agora que tengo no te daré, ruega a Dios que no tenga, porque te de: When I had not I gave you, now I have I will not give you; pray to God I may not have that I may give you. These are the words of a covetous man, or rather of one upbraiding such a person, and signifies, signifies, when I had not, that is, when I had little, I gave some of that little ; now I have, that is, much, I will give none, for avarice is most prevalent on those that have most, therefore we ought to pray to God that he would restore such a one to his poverty, that he might be restor'd to his charity.

Prov. Quando Dios quería, allende la barba escupia, agora que no puedo, escupome aquí luego : When it pleased God I us'd to spit beyond my beard, now I cannot do so, I spit here close by. Literally these are the words of an antient man who cannot spit from him, but says he could when he was young, and must now be satisfy'd to do as he can. But metaphorically they are us'd by any that have been rich or in power, and are fallen to a low condition, who thus express that when they were in their flourishing estate, they did what they pleas'd, but now they do what they can.

Prov. Qual Dios te hizo tal te apiada : As God made you so may he have compassion of you. This they say to a natural, or any other that cannot help himself, praying to God that since he has made him so wretched, he will accordingly provide for him.

Prov. Dios proveerá, mas buen haz de pája se querrá : God will provide, but he will expect a good truss of straw for himself. These are literally the words of a brutal clown grudging God his offering or tythes, but apply'd to any one who receives much and grudges to make a small return or acknowledgment out of it.

Prov. Quando Dios no quiere el santo no puede : When God will not the saint cannot. That is, when God has decreed otherwise, the saints to whom we pray for intercession cannot alter the decree. There is no striving against the will of God.

Prov. Qual era Dios para mercader : What a good shopkeeper or merchant God would make. That is, how would any one thrive that knew what was to come, as God goes.

Prov. Quando Dios quiere en sereno llueve : When God pleases it rains in fair weather. That is, tho' all appear never so calm or prosperous, if God pleases he can raise sudden storms, or overthrow our prosperity.

Prov. Quien bien está, y mal brisca, si mal le viene, Dios le ayuda : He that is well and seeks to be ill, if ill befall him, God helps him. That is, God grants him what he sought for, tho' it be to his loss, for God often gives a man that for his punishment, which he sought after for his satisfaction.

Prov. Quien siembra en Dios espera : He that sows hopes in God. So in all other things when a man uses his endeavours he hopes God will give a blessing.

Prov. Quien no habla Dios no le oye : God does not hear him who does not speak, without a man makes known his wants or his desires, he cannot expect to be reliev'd ; therefore these words are in common use to those who say they have long wanted any thing yet did not speak before.

Prov. Quien yerra, y se enmienda, a Dios se encomienda : He that commits a fault and mends, recommends himself to God. That is, as frail men we commit faults, but if we endeavour to amend, God's mercy accepts of that sign of our repentance, and the very amendment is a sort of prayer to God.

Prov. Quien se muda Dios le ayuda : He that removes God helps him. This may be taken in a superstitious sense, as if removing from one place to another did alter a man's fortune ; but the true meaning is that generally people remove to better themselves, for we do seldom go from one place to another but upon some prospect of advantage or satisfaction.

Prov. Quien se guarda, Dios le guarda : God keeps him that keeps himself. That is, if a man takes care to keep himself out of danger, it is likely God will keep him from their ill consequences. We must not run our selves into needless dangers out of a vain confidence in God.

Prov. Quien de los suyos se aleja, Dios le dexa : God forsakes him that removes far from his friends. It means that friends and relations are more likely to do for a man than strangers. This proverb is good in Spain, where kindred never fail to help one another, but in England where this is little practis'd, it is of no value, for here only those are a-kin to the rich who are as well to pass as they, the poor relations are disown'd and cast off.

Prov. Rogamos a Dios por santos, mas no por tantos : We pray'd to God for saints, but not for so many. Literally a saying of poor labouring people, when too many holydays come, on which they must not work. But apply'd in any other case, when things come too fast. Too much of one thing is good for nothing.

Prov. Si Dios quisiere, y Juan emi- ere, echarémos a Pedro de casa : If God pleases, and John comes, we'll turn Peter out of doors. That is, if we can get a better servant, we'll turn away a worse. Or in any other sense, If it pleases God to furnish us with what is better, we will fare better.

Prov. Si Dios de aquí me levanta ; mañana hilaré una manta. Sol y día bueno, que manta. O que duelo : If it please God I rise to-morrow I'll spin a blanket. The sun shines and 'tis a fair day, what need of a blanket, or where's the grief. An old woman being very cold in her bed, promis'd if she liv'd till the next day to spin for a blanket, but the sun shining and feeling her self warm the next day, she did not care for spinning, and thought there was no need of a blanket. This is apply'd to all people who in their distress make fair promises, and perform nothing, when they are deliver'd from them. We say, they are vows made in storms, forgot as soon as it is calm.

Prov. Valate Dios Pedro. No tal, que el asno es recio : God help you Peter. No need, for the ass is strong : A good man seeing an ass run away with a country-fellow, cry'd, God help you, fearing he might fall. There's no need, says the clown, for the ass is strong. Apply'd to those who are grown rich and great, and when men say, God help them, are so proud that they think they do not stand in need of God.

Prov. Viole Dios a ver sin campanilla : God came to see him without a bell. This they say when a man has any great happiness befalls him unexpected, they say, God came to see him, that is, with a blessing, and without a bell, because when the blessed sacrament is carry'd to dying men, which is God going to visit them, there goes a bell before to give notice.

Prov. Quiera Dios Matéa, que este hijo nuestro sea : God grant Matthew this be our son. This is the prayer of a countryman who marry'd a wife and she was brought to bed at six months end, which made him mistrust the child was not his, but a physician who had got it persuaded him, he was more than other men, who could get a child in six months, yet he doubt remaining in his head he still said, God grant the child be ours. This is applicable in all sorts of doubts, but most us'd when men boast of actions or works, which we mistrust are not their own, for then this proverb is well apply'd to them. We have a blunt saying, I pray God you be john, not unlike it, and taken from a wench who had a man in bed with her, and much doubted whether it was her real sweet-heart.

Prov. Después de Dios la olla: Next to God the olla, that is, the pot of boil'd meat and soups, which the Spaniards are so great admirers of that it caus'd this saying.

DÍOSA, a goddess.

Los dislates de Juan de la Enzina: The absurdities of John de la Enzina. This John de la Enzina was a very learned man in Salamanca, who compos'd a sort of doggerel rhimes extraordinary ingenious, but so contriv'd that they sound like absurdities, under which much wit and judgment is couch'd. These rook so well with all sorts of people, that many other serious things he compos'd were lost, and it remain'd a proverb when any body speaks absurdly, to say, they are the absurdities of John de la Enzina. He being upon a journey the inn-keeper's wife heard the servants name their master John de la Enzina, whereupon she slept up to him, and gazing in his face, said, Sir, was it you that compos'd the absurdities. At which he was much out of countenance and gave her some hard words, wherein he was guilty of the greatest absurdity.

DISMINUYDO, diminish'd.

E C I

ECIJA, a noble city in the province of Andaluzia in Spain, seated in a pleasant plain, on the banks of the river Xenil. Its territory is delicious, its buildings sumptuous, its walls strong, with nine gates. The country about yields oil, all sorts of fruit, and products of the earth, feeds great numbers of cattle, abounds in fowl, and produces vast plenty of corn, wine, great quantity of scarlet dye that grows on small shrubs, and much cotton. The breed breed of horses here is of great value. It contains 8000 houses, 6 parishes, 10 monasteries of friars, 6 of nuns, 5 hospitals, and 9 chapels. Augustus Caesar call'd it Augusta Firma. Here is a famous stone gallows, for which reason the rascally-fool, by way of contempt, bid one another go to the Rollo de Ecija; that is, the gallows of Ecija, as we say, go to be hang'd.

ECLÉSIA'STICO, a church-man, an ecclesiastical person, a clergyman; also any thing belonging to the church. The book of Ecclesiasticus in the bible.

ECLIPSA'DO, eclipsed.

ECLIPSA'R, to eclipse.

ECLIPSE, an eclipse of the sun or moon. The first caused by the moon's interposing betwixt him and us, which hides the light from us. The latter by the earth's interposing betwixt the sun and moon, which deprives the moon of the light she receives from the sun, and so she becomes dark. So the first happens by the conjunction of the two planets, and the latter by opposition. So called from the Greek eclipseo, to fail.

ECLIPSIS is also a figure in rhetoric, when some word lies obscure to be understood.

ECLÍPTICO, belonging to the eclipses.

ECLÍPTICA línea, the ecliptick line, on which the sun finishes his yearly motion; so called, because the eclipses both of the sun and moon happen, when the moon either in conjunction or opposition is under this line. This line cuts the zodiack in two.

E C O

E'co, an echo, or the rebound of the last part of the voice, or other sound, return'd in valleys, or hollow places, caused by the sound meeting with opposition, which makes it return as a ball does: In poetry écho is a sort of verse, in which the last part of the last word is repeated, as the natural echo does words, as in these verses of our Saviour:

*El mas querido y inflamado, amado,
Puesto en el duro y sin consuelo, suelo,
Sufre por mí de tierra y cielo, yelo,
En un pesebre desechado, echado.*

EFE'MINA'R, to effeminate, to make womanish.

E'FESO, the famous city Ephesus in the Lesser Asia.

Hablar ad Efesos, vid. Hablar.

EFE'TA, this word is corrupted both as to the way of speaking or writing, and the signification; for it is used to signify, that a man stood firm in the denial, and could never be brought to speak the truth of what was ask'd him, therefore, they say, such an one always said Efeta; that is, he discover'd nothing. The true word is epipheta, spoken by our Saviour when he cured the deaf and dumb man, and signifies be opened, commanding his mouth and ears to be opened, to speak and hear. Therefore this word is used in baptism in imitation of our Saviour; but the generality of the people have made use of it to signify the dumbness of a man who will not confess what is ask'd of him.

GRAN, great, big, large, being the same as grande, and us'd generally for it when plac'd before the substantive; as gran l6mbre, gran ruido, gran casa, &c. whereas grande is us'd after the substantive; as l6mbre grande, ruido grande, casa grande, &c.

GRANA, scarlet, the scarlet die; one sort of it gather'd in Spain, being small seeds which grow to the holm-oak, and which they gather in the spring. Within them there breed little worms, as red as blood, which break out of those seeds and run up the walls; whence they sweep them down with hares feet, and then sprinkle them with white wine, of which they make little cakes of rich scarlet, to die cloth or silk. Thus Covarr. The echinile is also called by this name, because it is the same die. Of which see more verb. Cochinilla.

GRANA de parayso, grains of paradise, cardamum.

GRANA'DA, a pomegranate; so called because full of grains or seeds; also a granade.

GRANA'DA, a city and kingdom in Spain. The kingdom is large, and bounded on the east by that of Murcia, on the north and west by Andaluzia; and on the south by the Mediterranean sea. It is indeed counted a part of Andaluzia, and is a most delicious fruitful country, producing all things that man can wish in great plenty, and the greatest perfection. It contains several great cities, and in them abundance of rich nobility and gentry. The city of this name is the capital of this kingdom; seated at the foot of the mountain Sierra Nevada, near the rivers Darro and Genil, which render it a sort of earthly Paradise; its product hinted at above: But to be more particular, there is great plenty of wheat, oil, fruit, all grain, herbs, flax, honey, game, fowl, cattle, and scarlet die; besides, it has mines of silver and gold, iron, lead, salt, jasper-stone, alabaster, and other excellent stones; and above all, it has a rich trade of silk made in it. The city is wall'd, on which there are 130 towers, being two leagues in compass, with twenty gates, within four great squares or markets, and among them that of Risarambla, 600 foot long, and 180 broad. Here is also the noble palace and castle of the Alhambra, which is like a town. It contains at present above 50000 inhabitants, divided into 24 parishes, with 20 monasteries of men, 18 of nuns, and 13 hospitals. It is also an university and archbishoprick, worth to its prelate 40000 ducats a year. It was antiently called Iliberia.

NUEVA GRANA'DA, or Nuevo reyno de granada, is a kingdom in South America, reckoned a part of the vast country of Castilla del Oro, and lies betwixt the provinces of Popayan, Paria and Santa Marta, 130 leagues in length, and about 30 in breadth. It has in it mines of gold and precious stones, large forests, and excellent pastures. It is very near the equinoctial, which is the reason there is little difference of summer or winter, or length of days and nights; but it is subject to hurricanes, thunder and lightning. Its chief provinces are Bogota and Tunia. The capital city Santa fe de Bogota; the other chief cities Trinidad, Palma, Pamplona, Merida, Tunia, Me-requita, Victoria, San Juan de los Llanos, &c.

Echar los hígado, to labour unreasonably to compass any thing; also to spue one's heart up.

Tenér males hígados, to be ill inclined.

Prov. Lo que es bueno para el hígado es malo para el bazo: What is good for the liver is bad for the milt. That which does good to one hurts another.

HIGO, a fig. Lat. ficus. It is also taken for the piles or hemorrhoids.

Higo del río, a plant growing in waters, called nenuphar, or water-lily.

Higo de la India, o Banána. This is a fruit growing in India, and on the coasts of Africa, and most generally known by the name of Banana, but the Arabs and Persians call it Mous. The tree is about 14 or 15 foot high, consisting of many rinds or leaves growing one upon another. The trunk about the thickness of a man's leg, the root round and thick, and the common food of elephants; the leaf a bright green within, and a darker without, above two yards long, and near a yard wide. From the heart of the tree shoots a sprout about the thickness of a man's arm, divided by many knots, and on each of them 10 or 14 figs, in all from 100 to 200, and never more than this one branch that bears them. They are of several sorts, of a very pleasant taste and smell; some of them are a span deep in thickness, and are eaten fresh with wine, cinnamon, and sugar, and they are kept preserved with sugar and cinnamon. The Indian physicians give these figs to people in fevers, and other distempers; yet others say they are hurtful to the stomach. When the figs are ripe, the branch that bears them is cut off, and the tree withers, and is given to the tame elephants; and from the root springs another. Some are of opinion that this was the forbidden fruit which made Adam transgress. They that desire to see more of it may read Christ. Acosf. nat. hist. E. Ind.

Prov. El higo que cae y no se levanta, es bueno para mi garganta, el ligo saltador, es bueno para mi señor: The fig that falls and does not rise, is good for my throat; the fig that leaps is good for my master. So said a waggoner servant, who eat all the best figs himself, and gave the worst to his master; for those figs that fall and do not rise, are such such as are soft and thorough ripe; those that leap or rebound when they fall, are hard and not ripe.

HIGUERA, a fig-tree. They also give this name to the plant called Palma Christi, growing in Egypt.

Higuera loca; Nebrissenfis says it is the sycamore-tree; but Covarrubias the wild fig-tree.

Higuera del infierno, the herb called spurge.

La higuera de Andújar, a town of 200 houses, 1 parish, 2 chapels, and an hospital, in the province of Andalucía in Spain, 2 leagues from Andújar.

La higuera de Martos, a town of 200 houses, 1 parish, 2 chapels, and an hospital, in the province of Andalucía, 5 leagues from Jaen.

HIGUERA'L, an orchard of fig-trees.

HIGUERUELA, a little fig-tree.

HIGUERO, a large tree in New Spain in North America, whose leaves are like those of our mulberry-trees, and the tree like them in shape and size. It bears a fruit like a lemon, long and round, and in other shapes; of which the Indians make drinking-cups and other vessels. Sometimes they eat the pulp of it, which resembles that of the gourd.

HIJA, a daughter. Quasi fija. From the Latin filia.

Hija d'algo, a gentlewoman. Vid. Hidalgo and Hidalgo.

Prov. Hija desposada, hija enagenada: A daughter married is a daughter alienated. Because then she is her husband's, and no longer her father's.

Prov. Hija séy buena; Madre, be aquí un clavo: Daughter, be good; Mother, here's a nail. Apply'd to those who answer nothing to the purpose, or who take no notice of good admonitions.

Prov. Hija ni mala seas, ni hagas las seméjas: Daughter, be not wicked, nor do not the likeness of it. That is, you must not only be good, but seem so.

Prov. Hija regalada, quíeres cuánto o rebanada? Pamper'd daughter, will you have crust or slice? A reflection upon dainty people.

Prov. Hija Gómez, se bien te lo guisas, bien te lo comes: Daughter Gomez, if you dress it well, you eat it as well. Taken from one that boasted of dressing meat well, but eat it all herself; and apply'd to those who would fain be praised for all they do for their own interest.

Prov. La hija de la ramera como es criada, y la esposa como es bilada: The flumpet's daughter as she is bred, and hemp as it is spun. So they prove; for hemp may be spun fine, and an whore's daughter bred honest.

Prov. Mi hija Maribuela, la mano en la rueca, y el ojo en la puerta: My daughter Molly has her hand on the spinning-wheel, and her eye on the door. This they say to idle people, who neglect their work to gad or gaze about.

Prov. Mi hija hermosa el Lunes a Toro, el Martes a Zamora: My beautiful daughter goes on Monday to Toro, and on Tuesday to Zamora; two cities in Spain. A reproof to handsome women, who love to be gadding to show their beauty.

Prov. A la hija mala, dineros, y casulla: A wicked daughter must have money given her, and be married. That is, if a man finds his daughter in danger of growing lewd, or losing her reputation, the only way to save all is to give her a portion, and marry her off.

Prov. A hija casada salemos yernos: When our daughter is married we find sons in law. That is, when we have no need, every body offers us service.

Prov. Bezastes tus hijas galanas, cubriconse de yervas tus sembradas: You used your daughter to be fine, and your corn grew full of weeds. Taken from a poor country fellow, whose daughters used to weed his corn, but after they took to be fine, the corn did not thrive; and applied to those who toil and spend all they have to keep their children fine and idle.

Prov. Muchas hijas en casa, todo se abraza: Many daughters in an house consume all. Because they are chargeable to maintain, and more to marry off.

Prov. Por casar mi hija, mandé mi viña; casé mi hija, negué mi viña: I promised my vineyard to marry my daughter; I married my daughter, and I denied my vineyard. This is like all those who promise great portions, but when their daughters are married give little or nothing.

Prov. Quando la hija dixere Táyta, méte la mano en el arca: When the daughter can say Mammy, put your hand into the chest. That is, as soon as a daughter can speak, she begins to be chargeable.

Prov. Quando a tu hija le viniere su hádo, no agüardes a que venga su padre del mercado: When your daughter's good fortune comes, do not stay till her father comes from market. That is, if you have an opportunity to dispose of your daughter well, do not stay for her father, tho' he be but at market, lest you slip the opportunity. Applied in all other cases, and is the same as, Lay hold of opportunity by the forelock.

Prov. Si mucho las pintas y las regálas, de buenas hijas harás malas: If you paint and pamper them too much, of good daughters you'll make bad ones. Children, or youth in general, are corrupted by fondness and pampering.

Prov. Sufriré hija golosa, y alvenderé, mas no ventanera: I'll bear with a daughter that is liquorish, or given to gadding, but not one that is always at the window. That is, a woman had better gad abroad, than expose herself to the censure of neighbours at her own windows.

Prov. Tres hijas y una madre, quatro diábolos para el padre: Three daughters and a mother are four devils to the father. Because of the charge of maintaining women; and because generally, if there be any difference, the women side together against the father.

Prov. Una hija, una maravilla: One daughter, one wonder. Because they think that he who has one daughter has commonly more; and because to have but one is a comfort, whereas many are troublesome.

Prov. Quién tiene hijas para casar, tome sedijas para hilar: Let her that has daughters to marry take silk to spin. That is, let her give them a good example, and keep them employed; for idleness is the bane of all youth.

HIJA'DA, the flank.

Mal de hijada, a pleurisy.

HIJADEAR, to pant, to blow hard in the flank, as an horse does.

HIJA'R, a town in the kingdom of Aragon in Spain, 12 leagues from Zaragoza, seated at the foot of an hill, on the banks of a brook called Martin, has a strong castle on an eminence, 500 houses, 1 parish, and 1 monastery of Franciscan friars; its territory rich in corn, wine, oyl, saffron, silk, fruit, fowl wild and tame, and game.

HIJA'RES, as Hijadas, the flanks.

HIJA'STRA, a daughter-in-law; that is, a step-daughter.

HIJA'STRO, a son-in-law; that is, a step-son.

Hijo, a son. Quasi fijo. From the Latin filius.

Hijo d'algo, vid. Hidalgo.

Hijo de la gallina blanca, a white boy, a favourite, a darling; also a fortunate man.

Hijo legítimo, a son lawfully begotten.

Hijo natural, espurio, or bastardo, a bastard son.

Hijo primogénito, the first-begotten son.

Hijo adoptivo, an adoptive son.

Hijo espiritual, a spiritual son.

Hijo póstumo, a posthumous son; that is, one born after his father was dead, or cut out of his mother's womb after she was dead.

Hijos are also the young shoots that sprout out of trees.

Prov. El hijo de la puta a su madre saca de duda, quando parece al padre: The son of a whore clears his mother, when he is like his father. Because every one takes him to be his son whom he resembles.

Prov. Muchos hijos y poco pan contento con afrán: Many children and little bread are a satisfaction with great care and anxiety. Poor people are pleased to have children, but must labour hard to maintain them.

Prov. Al hijo de tu vecina, quitale el moco, y cáfale con tu hija: Wipe your neighbour's son's nose, and marry him to your daughter. That is, you had better take a neighbour you know with his faults, than a stranger you do not know.

Prov. Cása el hijo quando quisieres, y la hija quando pudieres: Marry your son when you please, and your daughter when you can. That is, your son may get a wife at any time, but your daughter must be married when you can give her a portion.

Prov. Cafa tu hijo con tu igual, y no diránde ti mal: Marry your son to your equal, and they will not speak ill of you. Because if you marry him above his quality, he is subject to be hen-peck'd, and then to be laugh'd at.

Prov. A bien te salgan hijo tus barragánadas: God send no harm comes, son, of your youthful boldness. This they say a father said to his son, who from an high window was braving a dead bull; and it is used as a scold to those that brave it, and talk great, far from any danger.

Prov. Da a tu hijo mai por mal, dexarlo has al hospital: Give your son evil for evil, and you'll leave him to the hospital. That is, if you turn out a son because he is lewd, and disinherited him, he must come to beggary, or, what is worse, to the gallows.

Prov. De hijos y de corderos los campos llenos: Of sons and lambs the fields full. That is, no matter how many sons, and how much cattle a man has, so he has not many daughters.

Prov. Hijo eres y padre serás, qual bizieres tal auras: You are a son, and will be a father; as you act, so you will find. That is, if you are not dutiful to your parents, you'll have the curse of undutiful children; or the contrary.

Prov. Dónde ay hijos, ni parientes, ni amigos: Where there are sons, there are neither kindred nor friends. That is, kindred nor friends are not regarded in comparison of a man's own children.

Prov. El hijo del mezquino, poco pan y mucho vicio: The miser's son eats little bread, but is very vicious. That is, he eats little of his father's bread; for the covetous man values not what courtes his children take, provided they be no charge to him.

Prov. El hijo sabe que conoce a su padre: It is a wife child that knows its father.

Prov. El hijo borde y la mula cada día hazen una: The bastard son and the mule do one every day. That is, do some unlucky trick; because mules are generally vicious, and bastard sons for the most part ill bred.

Prov. El hijo del hidalgo un pie descalço, y el otro calçado: A gentleman's son with one foot shod and the other bare. That is, tho' he be so poor that he has scarce shoes to his feet, yet he is respected as a gentleman; which is practised in Spain, but not in England.

Prov. El hijo muerto, y el apio en el huerto: The son dead, and the parsley in the garden. That is, it was found out when he was dead, and they wanted it for some medicine whilst he was living. Answerable to, after meat mustard, or, a day after the fair.

Prov. El hijo barto y rompido, la hija banbrinta y vestida: The son well fed and ragged, the daughter hungry and well clad. That is, keep them so. The son must be kept in full vigour, and no matter what cloaths he wears; the daughter must rather pinch her belly, than want good cloaths.

Prov. Hijo tardano luerfano temprano: A late son is soon an orphan. That is, he that is born in his father's old age.

Prov. Hijo no tenemos, y nombre le ponimos: We have no son, and we give him a name. That is, we reckon our chickens before they are hatch'd.

Prov. El hijo por nacer, y la papilla a hervir: The son not born, and the pap boiling. The sense much like the former.

Prov. Hijo ageno mételo por la manga, salírse ha por el seno: Another man's child, if you put him in at the sleeve, will come out at the bosom. That is, give him an inch, and he'll take an ell.

Prov. Hijo, si fuéres bueno, para ti planto majuelo, y si malo, para ti planto: Son, if you prove good, I plant a vineyard for you; and if wicked, sorrow. That is, if you are virtuous, all I do for you will become a blessing; if not, it will prove a curse. The Spanish word planto is ambiguous, signifying to plant, and mourning.

Prov. Hijo sin dolor, madre sin amor: A son born without pain makes a mother without love. Mothers generally love those children best with whom they have most pain.

Prov. Hijos y criados no has de regalar, si quieres dellos gozar: You must not pamper children and servants, if you would enjoy them. Because too much kindness spoils both.

Prov. Hijo malo mas vale doliente que sano: A bad son is better sick than well. Because then he is not able to do evil.

Prov. Mi hijo Benitillo antes maestro que discípulo: My son Bennet is a matter before he is a scholar. This they say of those who pretend to know things that they never learned.

Prov. Mi hijo vendrá barbado, pero no parido, ni preñado: My son will come home with a beard, but not brought to bed, nor with child. This a woman whose son was run away, being reproached with it by another whose daughter had been astray, and got with child, retorted upon her; and it is apply'd to any who pretend to reproach others, having greater faults at home.

Prov. Mis hijos criados, mis trabajos doblados: My children bred up, and my troubles double. Because when the children are grown up they grow unruly, and commonly give their parents more sorrow than when little.

Prov. No me pesa que mi hijo pierda, siro que desquitarse quiera: I am not sorry that my son loses, but that he will have his revenge. Because if men would go off with their first loss, few would be great sufferers; but the desire of revenge draws them in to lose all.

Prov. Quien tiene hijo varón, no de voces al ladron: Let not him who has a son a son grown a man, cry out thief. That is, let him not find faults with others, lest his son be as bad. And in another sense, let him not call out to others to defend him against a thief, if he has a son of his own able to do it; for it shows his son a coward not to deal with a thief in his father's defence.

Prov. Si quieres que tu hijo crezca, lávate los pies, y rapale la cabeza: If you'll have your son grow, wash his feet and cut his hair. That is, keep him clean and breed him hardy, exposing his head to the weather.

Prov. Siete hijos de un vientre, cada uno de su mente: Seven sons of one womb, and every one of his mind. That is, 'o many men, so many minds.

Prov. Todos somos hijos de Adán y Eva, mas diferenciamos la seda: We are all Adam and Eve's children, but silk makes a difference between us. That is, fine cloaths or wealth makes all the difference.

Prov. Quién a mi hijo quita el moco, a mi besame en el rostro: He who wipes my son's nose, kisses my face. That is, the small kindness shown to my child, I take as a double one to my self.

Prov. Quién hijos tiene al lado, no muere abitado: He who has children by his side, does not die of a surfeit. That is, he who has many children never thinks he has enough for them.

Prov. Allí has a tu hijo heredero donde anda la niebla en Enero: Make your son an heir (that is, purchase an estate) where there are fogs in January. That is, in a country that is well water'd, whence fogs arise; because in Spain they fear drought rather than too much wet.

Prov. Hijo de viuda, y criado, mal acostumbrado: A widow's son and man servant are ill taught, because where there is not a man to govern, they are never kept in awe.

Prov. No me pesa que mi hijo enfermó, mas de las malas costumbres que tomó: I am not sorry my son fell sick, but for the bad customs he learned. Because sick persons are humour'd, which is the occasion they get ill habits; and therefore the sickness is not the trouble, but the ill habits he learned.

Prov. Cada uno es hijo de sus obras: Every man is the son of his actions. That is, his actions make him noble or ignoble; because a virtuous man, tho' basely born, is in reality more noble than the son of the greatest man, who is vicious.

Prov. El hijo del Alcáide, aunque mate cien hombres, con todo salo: The Alcáide's son, tho' he kill an hundred men, comes off still. That is, great men commit all sorts of villanies unpunished, as we see daily practised.

Hijuela, a little daughter. From filola. It is also a small linnen cloth used by the priest at the altar, to wipe the chalice.

Hijuelas are also small trenches cut in the fields for water, which run into the great ones call'd mádras, that is, mothers, and the small, little daughters.

Prov. A ti te lo digo, hijuela; entiéndelo tu, mi nuera: I speak it to you, my little daughter; do you mind it, daughter-in-law. A way of speaking, when seeming to correct one person, we aim at another.

Prov. Adelante, hijuela, y divástele curnido: Go on, daughter, and call him cuckold. That is, cail your husband cuckold in jest, and he will never suspect he is so in earnest. It is not unlike, Cry whore first.

Hijuelo, a little son. Lat. filiolus.

Hómbre apercibido medio combatido, a man that is prepar'd has half the battle over. The sense the same as the last above.

Prov. No todos son hómbres los que méan a la pared: They are not all men who piss against the wall; that is, all who have the shape and outward actions of men, are not men in prudence, valour, and other manly attributes.

Prov. Al hómbre viejo múdale tierra, y dará el pellejo: Remove an old man from one country to another, and he will leave you his skin; that is, when a man is grown old in one place, it may cost him his life to remove to another country.

Prov. Del hómbre es errár, y del diáblo perseverar: It is human frailty to err, but a diabolical obstinacy to persevere.

Prov. De hómbre palabri-mugér, libreme Dios del: Some will have this to signify, God deliver me from a man that has a voice like a woman; that is, shrill; and it may be used in that sense. But there is another better, which is, God deliver me from a man who regards not what he says, but like a woman, talks any thing, and never keeps his word.

Prov. El hómbre haga ciento, la mugér no le toque el viento: Tho' the man commit an hundred faults, the woman must not let the wind blow upon her; that is, tho' the man be never so false to her, she must not give the least cause of suspicion that she is so to him.

Prov. El hómbre buéno no síbe en lecho agéno: A good man does not get into another's bed; that is, does not commit adultery.

Prov. El hómbre rico con la fama casa el hijo: A rich man marries his son by fame; that is, the fame of his wealth brings him choice of wives.

Prov. Hombre que fufre cuernos fufri-ra dientes ménos : The man who bears with horns, will bear with loss of teeth ; that is, he who knowingly will suffer himself to be cuckolded, will suffer another to beat his teeth down his throat.

Prov. Hombre zeloso el cuerno al ojo :
A jealous man has horns in his eyes ;
that is, every shadow frights him, and looks like one that cuckolds him.

Prov. Hombre convido, mas vale de cierto, que de sino : A man had better be made a cuckold by an hundred than by one ; because when people talk of many it is scarce believ'd, and of one every body credits it.

Prov. Hombre ofado la fortuna le da la mano : Fortune gives her hand to a bold man ; that is, fortune favours the bold.

Prov. Al hombre harto las cerizas le amargan : When a man's belly is full, hart-cherries taste bitter ; that is, the greatest dainties have no good taste when a man is full.

Prov. Al hombre por la palabra y al buey por el cuerno : Hold a man by his word, and an ox by the horn.

Prov. Al hombre pobre capa parda y casa de roble, taza de plata, y olla de cobre : A poor man should have a sad-colour cloak, a house of oak, a silver cup, and a copper pot. Because they are lasting.

Prov. Al hombre vergonzoso el diablo le truxo a palacio : The devil carry'd the modest man to court. Because all evil is attributed to the devil ; and it is unhappy for a modest man to be at court, where none but impudence prevails.

Prov. Al hombre mezquino bástale un recino : One rag is enough for a miser.

Prov. Al hombre inocente Dios le enderéca la simiente : God guides a good man's seed ; that is, either his undertakings prosper, or his issue is provided for.

Prov. 'Ay hombres bestias como ansas pardas : There are beasts of men as well as grey geese.

Prov. Del hombre herido nunca te verás vengado : You'll never get your revenge of a rich man. They have too much power for the poor to have justice of them.

Prov. Dezír y hazér, no es para todos hombres : To say and do is not for men ; that is, all men have not so much honour or goodness.

Prov. De un hombre necio a vézes buén consejo : A fool sometimes gives good advice.

Prov. De hombre reglado, nunca te verás vengado : You'll never get your revenge of a regular man. Because he keeps out of harm's way.

con tu mayor* : From a gamester, and from a contest, or law-suit with one who is greater than you, good Lord deliver you.

Prov. De hombre que no habla, y de can que no látra : From a man who does not talk, and from a dog that does not bark, deliver us, &c. Because the silent man observes, and the dog bites.

Prov. Dos pocos, y un mucho hazen a un hombre rico : Two littles and one much, make a rich man. This may be understood literally. As we say, man-ny littles make a mickle. But the common interpretation of the two littles is, little shame and little conscience ; and the much, is, much industry : For industry, impudence, and no conscience are the way to wealth.

Prov. El hombre es el fuego, la muger la estopa, viene el diablo y sopla : Man is fire, and woman tow ; the devil comes and blows, and so sets it in a flame.

hilo* : The man that is well kept, stretches the thread ; that is, he is strong and labours hard.

Prov. El hombre necesitado cada año apedreado : The poor man has his corn destroy'd by hail every year ; that is, the poor shall be poorer.

Prov. El hombre bueno goza el hurto :
The honest man enjoys the theft ; that is, the receiver, who lives in reputation as an honest man, and sells what others steal.

Prov. El hombre mancebo perdiendo gana seso : The young man by losing, gains brains. Losses teach youth experience, and makes them cautious.

licada, ni apetito en el sabor* : A great eater must neither have dainties nor fine sauce.

Prov. Al hombre bueno no le busquen abolengo : Do not look for a good man's pedigree. Because his virtue betokens a good birth ; and tho' he be of no great family, virtue is honour enough.

Prov. El hombre metido en asfrenta háze per treinta : A man in distress or despair does as much as thirty. We see desire of revenge, necessity or despair, have made some men perform incredible actions.

Prov. Harto es el hombre de poco saber, que se mata por lo que no puede aver :
That man is fool enough who kills himself ; that is, who frets and vexes for what he cannot have, or for what cannot be mended.

Prov. Hombre de pocas palabras, y efsas sabias : A man should speak few words, and those wise ones.

Prov. Hombre apasionado, no quiere ser consolado : A man in affliction will not endure to be comforted.

tiene cura* : The man that rises early has some care upon him.

Prov. Hombre holgazán, en el trabajar se lo verán : You'll know an idle fellow by his work.

Prov. A vézes lleva el hombre a su casa con que llora : Sometimes a man carries that home which will make him lament. Men often mistake in choice of friends and other affairs, and are fond of that which proves hurtful to them.

Prov. Al hombre desnudo mas valendos camisones que uno : For a naked man two shirts are better than one.

Prov. Con hombre interesal no pongas tu caudal : Do not join your stock with a griping man, lest he cheat you, and run away with the profit.

Prov. Con un poco de terno llega el hombre a su derecho : With a little wrong a man comes by his right ; that is, a man must sometimes strain a point beyond what looks honest to get his own.

Prov. De hombre ebrio, y de borracho ayrado : From an obstinate man, and from an angry drunkard, deliver us, O Lord.

Prov. Hombre bravo, y resongón, son pedernal y eslabón : An hasty man, and one that mutters, are like a steel and a flint ; one provokes and the other strikes fire.
